First, in conservation of resource. Generous possession of material resource has increased prodigality in expenditure. Where forests were, too many barren fields have come. The vital elements of the soil are being sold in foreign cattle markets. Each year from off Missouri fields is cropped too considerable a percentage of that which makes fertile these fields. There is waste on farm, in factory, in uncontrolled and useless waterways, in wanton destruction of timber, in unconserved material resource. Here the Missouri banker is needed to bring about the conservation of Missouri's material resource—agricultural, horticultural, mineral—the capital upon which, in the last analysis, the Missouri banker is to do business at his Missouri business stand.

Even the fertile soil of this state, rich beyond compare, cannot stand continuously agricultural overdrafts. Conservation of the real capital of the commonwealth is for its permanent prosperity basic.

Utilization follows fast on conservatism. I need not say in this presence that idle wealth is

MAUSOLEUM

The above mausoleum is one of our simple, well constructed designs which can be erected at a comparatively low cost with six to eight crypts. How much less barbarous this method is than burying in the ground.

profitless. Of such idle wealth Missouri has much. In its coal fields to-day are four hundred billion dollars' worth of unmined coal. Its building stone, surpassing that of any state, has been scarce touched by quarryman. Of its forty-five million acres, only twenty-two million acres, less than one-half, is in improved farms. One-fifth of the state and more, as far as agriculture is concerned, is absolutely idle. Nor is there proper utilization of the acreage cultivated. Pedigreed corn means utilization for larger cereal output. Corn with a grandfather would add 20 per cent to the annual corn production of the commonwealth. The fields that are tilled are too often merely tickled, not really cultivated. Extensive agriculture must be succeeded by intensive agriculture.

Nor is the farmer, upon whose prosperity the Missouri banker really rests, alone in failure to utilize the assets at his hands. At our very door flows a great river which could be made the servant of trade and commerce, but which unutilized we permit to be an open sewer, a menace to the farm lands adjacent to it, yielding danger when it might yield dividends.

The Missouri banker, the business ally of every interest in the state, may find opportunity to serve himself and the state by promoting the utilization of the hundred undeveloped resources which crowd the commonwealth, untilled farm lands, undeveloped mines, unharnessed water power, unopened quarries, fields lying fallow, and harvests waiting for the reaper's hands.

Let us conserve Missouri's resource—yes—but let all Missouri, soil and stone and stream, be put to work. Fast upon conservation in every business enterprise comes utilization. Keep count of the assets, but make the utilized reserves do service to the increase of the divided profits.

Transportation is requisite to right utilization. The road maker is needed in Missouri. Road making—not hysterical or spasmodic—but with serious business purpose, conducted as business enterprises of largest momentum must always be—by adequate financial support directed by trained men.

Four kinds of roads are needed throughout Missouri. Steam railroads are needed, better service and lines extended. Four Missouri counties are untouched by the steam railroad and into a half dozen others the locomotive merely glances and goes on. Across the state from north to south goes no great line of railroad. Great railroad systems traverse the state only from east to west, chasing the almighty dollar toward the Golden Gate. More steam railroads are needed. While preserving the authority of the people, while abating no jot or tittle of the law's requirement for the public good, let us give the railroad builder a chance.

Electric railroads are needed. Look at the map eastward. The trolley wire has fairly webbed the states from the Mississippi river, "the Father of Waters," to New Jersey, "the mother of the trusts." Where are Missouri's electric roads? Count out the counties of Jackson and Jasper and Buchanan and St. Louis, and there are none. The electric road is needed for the utilization of the wealth of the state.

Transportation includes the country highway, whether it be of stone or earth. Perhaps no material improvement in transportation would mean so much toward increasing the wealth of Missouri as hard roads—stone or other road metal, where such roads are possible, and where they are not, earth roads dragged and graded, over which traffic may move with ease for more than nine months in the year. For it is a short-sighted policy that calls upon the Missouri banker to promote in every possible way the building of such roads.

Nor are these all. Transportation includes the waterways. No state—think of it!—no state has so many miles of navigable streams as Missouri. And no state has so many miles of navigable streams unnavigated.

Cordially in sympathy am I with the lilt of the song, "Fourteen Feet Through the Valley," but even more sympathetic am I with the movement which shall put every Missouri river town upon the waterways map.

When the ditch which severs North America from South America is cut, I hope to see—I expect to see—a waterway opened to cheap navigation which will unite St. Joseph to San Francisco, St. Louis to Manila, Kansas City to the Emperor's palace in Peking.

Take down your map, Mr. Banker, and examine it a moment. When Canada finishes its canal building, unless the Missouri river is canalized for transportation, the grain harvests of the great Northwest go through the Dominion to the world's markets and the toll of transportation is paid into Canada's coffers.

If conservation and utilization are succeeded by right transportation, then the Missouri farmer is, by cheap waterways, nearest the markets of the world. Soil and fuel are here—fertile soil and cheap fuel. Cheap transportation makes the trinity upon which permanent prosperity depends.

So much for the tools with which the architects must work—or those with which they labor. What of the handlers of the tools?

The Missouri banker needs men as well as money for the utilization of the resources of the state. But he needs the right kind of men, as well as the right kind of money. More even than conservation—which is the preservation of the capital unimpaired—than utilization—which is the whole state out at interest—than transportation—which makes for easier exchange—than immigration—which adds to the population of the state—is the worth of education.

The Citizens State Bank of Comstock, Neb., are negotiating for a large safe.

The Musselshell Valley National Bank, Harlow Town, Mont., will erect a new bank building.

Secretary W. F. Keyser Reports to Missouri Bankers Convention

Secretary Keyser had his annual report printed in book form, for distribution at the 19th annual convention at St. Joseph this week. Among other things he reported:

At the end of the fiscal year 1908 every bank and trust company of the state except one was a member of the association. This condition was never before attained by any similar organization, and gives Missouri a record that will be hard to excel by other states, and one that can be maintained only through the continued and active assistance of our members. The only opportunity we now have to increase our membership is in the organization of new banks, and this opportunity has been reduced almost to the minimum by the fact that few banks are being organized, as compared with some former years. With every bank a member and every member a worker, certainly the Missouri Bankers Association should succeed in every good undertaking. Let us strive to make the number of workers reach the same point of unanimity as has been reached by the membership.

The secretary's report to the Joplin convention showed a membership of 1,154. At the time this report goes to press 1,202 members are enrolled.

Approximately 48,000 communications have been sent out from the secretary's office during the year. This number represents 23,000 special letters, 17,500 circular letters, and 7,500 copies of miscellaneous matter, besides a large number of folders and other forms of printed matter sent out in conjunction with circular letters.

This large volume of correspondence represents no insignificant amount of work, but it has been many times justified if it has accomplished the purposes for which it was intended.

Please do not be too willing to contribute the association literature to the waste basket without giving it due consideration, and bear in mind that every communication that reaches you from this office comes from your own association and is prepared with a purpose single to your interests.

It is our business to serve the members in every possible way, and to that end we are always anxious to hear from them with suggestions or criticisms, or when we can serve them in any capacity. As frequent communications from this office should keep you in touch with the association and what it is endeavoring to accomplish for its members, so will frequent communications from you help us to keep in touch with your needs. We want members to feel free to use the secretary's office, and the oftener we hear from our banks, the more will we be convinced of their interest in the association. Prompt replies to our communications would be appreciated, and we promise a like treatment of all communications coming to the secretary's office.

Des Moines, May 6.—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals has affirmed the judgment of the federal court at Des Moines and Carl M. Spencer, former collection clerk in the Des Moines National Bank must serve five years in the federal penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth for embezzlement of about $5,000. The case presented one of the nicest questions with which bankers have been confronted. Spencer as collection clerk, failed to turn over to the bank all of the money received by him. His defense was partially that this money did not then belong to the bank and hence he could not be accused of embezzlement from the institution. The holding of the circuit court on this point is of interest to every banker and in brief is as follows:

"Spencer had necessarily made the collection and taken the money into his possession before the act of conversion took place. In making the collection he was clearly acting as agent for the bank and his duty as such was to report and deliver the full amount collected to his principal. As between him and the bank, the money clearly belonged to the latter and any appropriation of it was the appropriation of money of the bank.

"Some cases concerning the title of money as between a depositor and the bank are called to our account. They generally have arisen in attempts to follow trust funds where the circumstances connected with their deposit were determinatory of the rights of the parties and in them expressions are found to the effect that the relation of creditor and debtor does not arise until money is actually deposited over the counter where the deposit is not complete until the money is actually delivered at the bank with the intention to make deposit. Contrary to the rule prevailing in many states, the supreme court has held that when banks receiving items for collection forward them to their correspondents to be collected from a debtor residing at a distance in the absence of any contrary understanding, they make the correspondent their own agent and become liable for his conduct. Much more would this be true between the bank and its clerk or agents employed by it to make collections. The bank is responsible for the act of its agent and cannot escape liability to its patrons for the money appropriated by its agents."

National Banks Show Gain

Des Moines national banks show a gain of $1,450,742 in deposits on April 28th, this year, the date of the recent call, as compared with their deposits on May 14, 1908. As compared with the deposits at the time of the last preceding call, Feb. 5, the gain is some $18,000. The figures show deposits on April 28th as follows: Citizen's National, $2,129,134, as against $2,059,407, May 14, 1908, a gain of $69,727; Des Moines National, $4,787,909 as against $3,827,286, a gain of $960,623; Iowa National, $6,633,889 as against $6,559,670, a gain of $74,370; Valley National, $2,315,692 as against $1,969,670, a gain of $346,022.

Loans on April 28th for the four banks totaled $11,732,959 as against $10,703,668 May 14th, 1908. Cash means totaled April 28th, $4,644,328 as against $4,675,203 May 14th, 1908.

On Trail of Swindler

The swindler who obtained $500 from the Citizen's National last week on a fake telegram narrowly escaped capture at Davenport where two detectives boarded the train on which it is thought he escaped but failed to locate him. Pinkerton detectives furnished by the American Bankers Association are now on the trail. The robbery was apparently the work of clever men but the bank officials insist that had the telegraph company sent a prompt reply to a message of inquiry sent by the bank to the supposed sender at Omaha, the fake would never have worked.

Sue Estate of Former Banker

The estate of the late W. L. Culbertson, the president of the First National at Carroll who shot himself last fall, has been sued for $264,292.92 in the courts at Carroll by receiver I. W. Fowler. The receiver files a complete statement of just where this amount went and approximately $10,000 consists of funds advanced to President Culbertson not even secured by his own promissory notes. It is shown that Culbertson had speculated heavily in properties such as the Eldorado Ditch in Oregon, "Utah mining enterprise," "Boynton Land & Lumber Company," etc. The invoice of the estate of the decedent aggregates $179,675.

Two Prominent Bankers Dead

Two Iowans prominent in banking circles have died within the past few days. Col. W. T. Shaw at Anamosa, senior member of the banking firm of Shaw, Schoonover & Co., is dead at the age of 80. Col. Shaw was a prominent Iowa financier, a veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars, identified with much Iowa railroad building.

H. P. Opfer, vice-president of the First National at Waukon, died at Mapleton, N. D., from over exertion caused by walking to catch a train to Fargo.

Group Four Meeting

The program for the meeting of Group Four at Decorah which was held in the court house Thursday, May 6th, was interesting and the meeting was well attended by the bankers from the counties of Allamakee, Clayton, Chickasaw, Delaware, Dubuque, Fayette, Howard and Winneshiek.

The address of welcome was given by H. C. Hjerlied, cashier of the National Bank of Decorah. President O. J. Hager of the First National of Waukon responded. F. E. Crandall, cashier of the Postville State, talked on Banks vs. Express Companies. A. Hanson, cashier of the First National of Oelwein, and R. O. Woodward, president of the Fayette County Savings of West Union spoke on topics selected by themselves. At 4 in the afternoon, the bankers were taken in automobiles to the base ball grounds to see Luther College and the University of Nebraska play a game of ball. At 7, the banquet was given at the Winneshiek Hotel. E. J. Curtin, president of the Citizens Savings of Decorah, was toastmaster and round table talk wound up a most enjoyable occasion.

Secretary Keyser's Report

Preserve all circulars of warning, and those describing criminals and their operations. No telling what day some one of them will be of service in identifying a criminal presenting himself at your window for an accommodation.

The activity of bank burglars has again been one of the principal sources of annoyance to members. Although the number of banks attacked was greater than that of last year, the aggregate amount stolen was materially less. Only two of the thirteen attacks could be termed successful, and in one of these cases nearly all the stolen money was recovered; whereas, six out of the twelve attacks of the preceding year were successful. This might indicate that a majority of the attempts this year were made by amateurs.

In each of the thirteen cases, the association's standing reward of $500 for the apprehension, conviction and imprisonment of each burglar was automatically effective. This reward was supplemented by rewards offered by the insurance companies carrying the risks. The fact of the association's standing reward of $500 for each burglar that attacks a member is becoming widely known among officers of the law, not only in Missouri, but in other states as well. In view of the large reward offered by the association, the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation offers a reward of $200 in Missouri for the apprehension and conviction of each person that attacks a bank insured in that company; whereas, in other states, this company offers a reward of only half that amount. The sign furnished for display by each of the "Ocean's" assured in this state indicates that a reward of only $100 is offered. This is because of the fact that it would not pay to have a special die made for the purpose of printing signs to be used by Missouri banks alone. However, each Missouri bank insured in the "Ocean" may feel assured that this company's reward is $200 for each burglar. Members should keep their reward signs prominently displayed. They serve the double purpose of a reminder to sheriffs and police officers, and a warning to any one contemplating burglary.

The problem of dealing with bank burglars is one well worthy of serious consideration on the part of our association. A law was passed by the last general assembly of Missouri, providing for an increase in the penalty for burglary to ten years in the penitentiary as a minimum punishment, and twenty-five years as the maximum. It seems, however, that the penitentiary presents no special horror to this class of desperadoes and they are willing to risk being caught and confined a few years for the sake of a few dollars of stolen funds. It is doubtful if anything short of life imprisonment will ever have the desired effect of stamping out this class of criminals. And I am radical enough on the subject to believe that such punishment would not be far in excess of what they deserve. One of the first things a bank burglar does is to prepare himself for murdering any person that interferes with the progress of his work. He goes to the scene of action with murder contemplated and does not hesitate to shoot down the first citizen that attempts to thwart his plans. Then why extend him any leniency? Certainly some law of similar nature would serve to stamp out this nefarious practice, which has become so alarmingly common as to place life and property in constant danger.

Mr. Keyser reported earnings of more than nine thousand dollars for his department and gave a synopsis of the ten splendid group meetings held during the year.

Huttig on the Financial and Commercial Situation

of the country, must rest on this foundation of gold and silver.

I am a firm believer in the potent influence of an abundance or the scarcity of money on the trend of the times. That is to say, assuming general conditions to be normal, low interest rates, capital seeking investment, and a plentifulness of loanable funds, should have a stimulating effect on business, and should make for better times. On the other hand, when we are enjoying prosperity, resulting in high prices, a scarcity of loanable funds, high interest rates, such as was the case preceding the panic, we are apt to have an overextension of credits, in disproportion to the volume of money, creating a superstructure on a foundation inadequate for its support. So we are confronted with the fact that our affairs are seldom in perfect balance; that we go to extremes and overdo in our periods of so-called prosperity, and fall short of normal activities in times of depression. This leads us to the conclusion that the law of cause and effect operates on finance and commerce as it does in all things in nature.

It is unnecessary to call attention to the disastrous effects on finance and commerce of the lack of public confidence in men and institutions. Everyone who has given the subject any thought, realizes its importance and significance. However, certain economic conditions such as have been previously alluded to must exist as co-operating influences. This is to say, in times like these, when money and credits are plentiful, it would be very difficult to breed a general feeling of distrust toward our financial institutions.

I believe we are entering into a new era of prosperity, and many reasons can be cited in this belief. We have had a series of years of good crops at high prices. Farming communities are in excellent shape financially, and are fast changing from the debtor to the creditor class. Our natural resources far surpass those of any other country in the world, and we are yet young in their development. We have no national or international disturbances; no disastrous epidemics, and our diversified crops with climatic conditions to suit, preclude the possibility of any general crop failure.

The immediate situation is influenced largely by tariff agitation and crop conditions. The disposition of the tariff question will be quickly followed by an adjustment to the new tariff law, and while the business recovery is all the more sound and healthy because of its slowness, a full harvest of farm products this year will stimulate the industrial revival, not only encouraging, but compelling the railroads to make large expenditures for additional rolling stock and general improvements.

In conclusion, I wish to express my sincere thanks and appreciation for the opportunity afforded me to be with you. The bankers of Missouri always have been noted for their conservatism and good common sense, and the statistical story of the state's financial institutions occupies one of the brightest and best pages in the annals of American banking. Your association has contributed largely to this excellent record, and I extend my earnest congratulations, as well as hearty good wishes for a continuation of the splendid history you have been making.

The Farmers Bank of Rockport, Mo., has increased its capital from $20,000 to $30,000.

Banking Conditions in Missouri

1st, toward defraying the expense of the commission; 2d, toward a fund to meet possible loss to the government in guaranteeing it, until a fund of an adequate amount is created to fully protect it; and 3d, the remainder should go into the general revenues of the government. The expense of the commission should be defrayed by the government in case the tax collected should not be sufficient to do so. The maximum amount that could be issued by any one bank should be regulated in proportion to capital stock, and the banks enjoying this privilege should be restricted to those operating under national law and subject to national inspection.

Under the workings of this plan, the country national banks could go to the commission and enjoy the same privilege as the clearing center banks, but they, and the state banks would probably apply to their city correspondents in case of need, the same as now; but the clearing center banks would in turn have a place to go for relief in case of emergency, which at present they are without. When a country bank, being "loaned up" is able to go to its city correspondent, pledge some of its securities, pay the tax, and get additional currency, the question of elasticity with it is fully met. This same privilege must be extended back to the government. The government is justified in meeting it because the welfare of the people is wrapped up in it, and if the government supplies the missing link, or rather the lacking currency, it is entitled to the tax or revenue accruing from it. The general banking business of the government under this plan would be handled through the various depositories, the same as now.

My time is now more than gone. Let me say only a few more words: Every Missourian must get pleasure in looking over the country's weekly clearing reports. A remarkable fact it is that in the schedule, three of the most potent factors are cities situated within the boundaries of this state, St. Louis occupying 5th place, Kansas City 6th, and the city in which we are now assembled—St. Joseph—about 17th place in the galaxy of cities of this great American republic. Furthermore, the comparative percentages of these home cities are among the best in the list. The reason for this can be easily discerned. To be permanently and steadily prosperous, we must have both city and country life, and our strength in Missouri lies in the fact that we have both in abundance. We have the raw materials and we manufacture them into finished products. The farmer can only find consumers of his surplus products in the homes and workshops of the cities; the artisan and skilled laborer of the cities in turn manufacture for the farmer. Our three large markets within our own state, in addition to those in our sister states, make it possible for our people to both buy and sell to the very best advantage—the time and cost of long transportation hauls being saved. Missouri to-day presents a panorama of achievements—a picture that may well stir the ambition of any man. In the country broad acres of undulating fields meet the eye, basking now in the warm embrace of this beautiful May day, pulsating with fertility, joyous with the kisses of sunbeam and breeze, and barely waiting for the touch of the plow to burst into bloom and ripen into fruit.

Entering our metropolitan cities the vision changes. Instead of the flower of the field, we see the scintillations of the forge and the glow of the furnace. Instead of the song of the meadowlark, the ear catches the music of the loom and the whirl of machinery. The pictures of nature's out-of-doors are changed to those of the halls of art—busy, matchless, glorious Missouri.

Chas. G. Evans' Report

The following day, the greater part of the delegates and guests bade good-bye to generous, hospitable Denver, with feelings of regret that the sojourn was of so short duration, to accept the invitation of the bankers of Colorado Springs to spend a few days there and visit the great smelters, Manitou Springs, Pike's Peak, and many other places of vital interest to strangers.

This meeting will be remembered as one of the most delightful and entertaining that it has been our good fortune to attend, and the name Denver will always recall pleasant memories of the great convention of 1908.

in death, can not endure the thought of parting with their possessions, even post mortem, and die intestate. Few testators know their own minds, and a death-bed will is as sorry a substitute for a carefully prepared instrument, as a death-bed repentance is for a well ordered life."

I will now close these rather desultory remarks; if I have been able to shed any light which will be of benefit to you, it will be gratifying to me. Samuel Warren, in concluding his great novel, "Ten Thousand a Year," does so with an apology which I borrow:

"Forgive my many faults and say of me, He hath meant well who writ this history."

Texas Banking Conditions

Annual address by President T. C.
Yantis of the Texas Bankers at the Houston convention. :: ::

It is with genuine pleasure that we meet in our twenty-fifth annual session. It has been almost of fourth of a century since the bankers of the Empire State of the South first met in this capacity. What this association has done in promoting the general welfare and usefulness of banking cannot be expressed in figures. The purpose that made necessary the formation of this association is the same that holds us together to-day in a strong bond of brotherhood, our purpose being the promotion, general welfare and usefulness of banking. We are glad to observe visitors and friends, some of whom came for business while others came for recreation. While there is much business to be attended to, and a little time for recreation for some of us, yet it is hoped that the most strenuous business may be as agreeable to us as the most delightful recreation.

We have met in this historic city, a retrospect of whose history calls up many scenes of activity and deeds of heroism. We love the city not only for what it has been, but for what it is to-day. Located as it is at the head of navigation, and with the enterprise and push of its citizenship, it will certainly always stand in the very front ranks of the great cities of our Southland. The evidence of hearty good will is seen in the faces before me, and every hand grasp from the first of our meeting together to-day has expressed mutual welcome and whole-souled good will.

It is good to meet here for real business and it affords us genuine satisfaction to assemble in annual convention where we can meet friends and form new acquaintances. We have work to do, however, and I trust that every member present will give his counsel, to the end that much good may be done and that the interests of our association may be advanced.

Although drought has prevailed over the greater portion of our state through the winter months, yet we have much for which to be thankful, since last we met in annual convention. The demoralizing business conditions incident to the panic of 1907 have passed and the banks all over the United States seem to be in a prosperous condition. The uncertainty of the change in national government passed with the presidential election and the activities of trade and commerce go on without interruption.

Texas

Looking out over the almost unlimited territory of our state, comprising over 250,000 square miles of territory, there appears before us a field smiling with possibilities beyond our imagination. Crops have been abundant the past year and old mother earth has been fruitful, making the laborer's heart glad. The products of our fields, orchards and ranches have been sold at fair prices bringing in large returns, and yet we have plenty at home. Texas is an open field for capital with the assurance that every investment will bring large returns. Irrigation is doing for the people of the state what the elements in many places refuse to do, and bountiful crops have been managed public schools at a cost of over six and one-half millions dollars annually, as well as colleges and universities, bear testimony in no uncertain measure to the people's moral and intellectual standing.

Texas may therefore be glad of heart and

The local paper at St. Joseph had no end of fun with the bankers who attended the Missouri convention there last week. Grouped together, some of the striking personalities are, top row from left to right: Gordon Jones, Denver; W. O. Jones (no relation), New York; J. R. Dominick, Kansas City; John W. Perry, Kansas City. Bottom row, left to right: Osgood T. Eastman, Omaha; Finis E. Marshall, New York, and the only F. A. Crandall, Chicago.

gathered where, a few years ago, lands were considered of little value. The man running a small farm, the fruit grower and truck gardener, have been prosperous as well as the man tilling his thousands of acres, the great ranchmen and the wealthy oil producer. Well governed cities, towns and villages attest the happiness and prosperity of our people. Well generous in disposition, extending the hand of cordial welcome to all who wish to investigate our resources and join us in developing this great empire.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., May 10. The big Missouri bankers' convention was almost too large for the hall, last week, and the addresses of the speakers filled THE CHICAGO BANKER too full of utterance on the routine and personal features of the notable gathering. It opened the southwest season with a bang and the traveling bankers present already are off on a trip to cover Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma. Quite a list. Some of them will cover Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, Kansas, Georgia or California before they again see Chicago, St. Louis or New York for fresh linen and a larger expense allowance. It is a gay life!

THE local papers here were quite up to the occasion and reported the sessions completely and interestingly. The New-Press cartoonist is about as good as they come. He detected F. A. Crandall (early on the trip) lighting cigars with ten dollar bills; caught J. W. Perry in a reminiscent mood; saw Finis E. Marshall longing to get back to the Bowery and J. R. Dominick ruminating on his "great effort." Reproductions in miniature will give the ideas.

NO need to say that the convention went off as planned by that wizard of secretaries, W. F. Keyser, or that Dominick and Hinton came up to the mark. The ball and every other social feature were credit marks to St. Joe.

W. K. CLEVERLY and W. O. Jones, "born and bred" New Yorkers, were on the job early and late.

ALEX. D. CAMPBELL, representing the $125,000,000 Hanover National of New York, was one of the busy ones.

FRANK D. BRUNDAGE for K. N. & K. and J. C. Purdy for the Irving Exchange National, also registered from the metropolis.

THE local paper introduced F. E. Marshall as president of an "Eighty million dollar New York bank," and thereby gladdened the hearts of his old Missouri neighbors and acquaintances.

HERE are a few of the "important arrivals" from Chicago with titles eliminated. F. T. Ransom, National Stockyards Bank; G. A. Ryther, Livestock Exchange; F. A. Crandall, National City Bank; Addison Corneau, Western Trust; W. T. Perkins, Hamilton National; Wilber Hatley, Continental National; Colin S. Campbell, Fort Dearborn National; William G. Schroeder, Continental National; W. W. Gates, Central Trust Company; G. M. Benedict, Drivers' Deposit National; W. H. Hurley, National Bank of the Republic; George B. Smith, Commercial National, and R. E. Gamble, Drivers' Deposit National. They all looked like bank presidents (some day).

IT is said that seventeen ex-presidents of the association were in attendance. The association has had nineteen chief executives, and but two are dead, W. J. Anderson (1893) and J. B. Thomas (1899).

VIRGIL M. HARRIS on "Legal Points" is getting to be a habit with Keyser. His number on the program fills the bleachers, too.

THE things most regretted by all were the absence of two important speakers on account of illness. The absentees were Pollard of Fort Madison, Ia., and W. W. Ferguson of Rich Hill.

THE new 1909-10 officers are: J. P. Hinton, Hannibal, president; A. O. Wilson, St. Louis, vice-president; A. H. Waite, Joplin, treasurer; and W. F. Keyser of Sedalia, who has held the office nine years, secretary.

THE local papers made it out that Keyser had with him as many changes of raiment as ever were sported by Harry M. Rubey or G. W. Galbreath (going some) and that changes came on schedule time, based on fashion's edict, not of Sedalia but of St. Joe.

AT the hotels bank presidents were assigned to cots, cashiers to carpeted floors and a. c.'s to the stair landings.

COLIN S. CAMPBELL, being on his old stamping grounds, could "show" the boys about in true Missouri style.

WHEN Huttig got under way with his talk he went the round like the fabled St. Andrew's golfer who did all the long holes in "two" and the short ones in "one."

W. W. COOK, not of the Western Trust, Chicago, but late of the Bankers Trust has been appointed chief of police for Kansas City, Kas., and now look out for the arrest of the yeggmen whom Keyser chases over the line.

D. E. HENNEBERRY, cashier of the Farmers Trust National at Minooka, Ill., is a native of Wilmington, and before mending his ways was a private banker.

"REVISED Rules of Golf (not banking) for 1909" has been issued in neat book form by the Commercial National, of Chicago, classified and indexed. Now, you foozlers, get busy and send in for a copy. It's vest-pocket size and up to the minute.

OUR compliments to H. B. Bartow, cashier of the Farmers and Mechanics National, of Philadelphia. On May 1st he announced the bank's 101st dividend which is going some. He attests the statement that the bank hasn't a bad debt on its books and that its investments are carried below their book value. Then he publishes a list of investments owned by the bank. In eight years the F. & M. has gone from $744,831 to $1,312,859 in surplus and from nine millions in deposits to more than fifteen millions. Nearly thirteen millions in dividends have been paid. Hats off to this fine record and to the men who are wise enough to let their light shine.

THE First Trust & Savings Bank of Alton, Ill., was but six weeks old when the state call came out. It showed $83,350 in deposits. D. A. Wyckoff, who helped along the group movement in the state so much, is the cashier. He formerly was with the Alton Trust & Savings Bank.

THE Progressive Banker is the name of a handsome paper put out monthly by the City Bank and Trust Co., Mobile, Ala.

Texas Bankers Celebrate Their Silver Jubilee

Welcomed to Houston on their 25th anniversary by J. E. McAshan of the South Texas National. :: :: ::

In welcome addresses it is customary for the orator to blow the horn of his city and state with strenuous and reverberating blasts. I feel that it is only necessary for a man to have eyes, ears and a brain to realize at sight the superiority of Houston and Texas over any other portion of the earth, yet I may mention Houston and Texas again before I am through.

This is an occasion of such great importance: This is a gathering of the Texas Bankers Association in their silver jubilee. You have been married to the association a quarter of a century. This is long enough to raise a family, and I see before me the sons of some of the patriarchs who founded the association, but who have closed their accounts with credit balances and with honor, and we welcome the kids as of old we welcomed the billies.

This period in Texas history is unique. The sleeping giant of measureless resources is awakening from the slumber of ages, and revealing to the world the illimitable wealth of Texas. It has been said that you cannot tell the truth about Texas without lying. Houston is the Queen City of Texas, the commercial and financial capital. Houston is the city of destiny, situated within reach of the sea, and with railroads running everywhere she is destined by the laws of population and trade to be the great city of the southwest. To our shores the argosies of the world's great commerce are wafted by favoring winds, and from our doors the products of a great and fruitful country extending from Canada on the north, Mexico on the south, the Atlantic on the east and the Pacific on the west, as through a great gateway are carried over the seas to feed and clothe the nations of the earth.

This is a time of so much moment and historical interest, that I fear that I may not rise to the occasion and give you such a welcome as we all feel, and such a welcome as you all know that we feel.

Texas is not a very old state. No effete civilizations have strewn its coasts with monuments or memories. No unnumbered generations have drawn from its generous soil life giving subsistence. All its endowments of multiplied riches bestowed upon it by a beneficent creator are still locked within its bosom, soil rich as the valley of the Nile; climate as varied almost as that of continental Europe, and mineral wealth varied almost as that of the lands of the earth, and every fruit and bloom good for food or apparel, await only development by man. Few cypress leaves adorn the brow of Texas. We have our sacred memories. The battle of Sabine Pass rivals that of Marathon. The defense of the Alamo was as heroic as that of the Thermopylae, and the battle of San Jacinto was as far reaching and as brilliant, though involving fewer people, as that of Waterloo. These are imperishable memories, and shed the lustre of increasing light along the gateway of Texas history. These are our contributions to the world's heroic events, but to the people of today it is the fact that the brow of Texas is crowned with the garlands of achievement, of laurel and of bay that makes the Lone Star State the star of promise, and that makes Texas the coming empire, to which millions of people are looking with eager eyes, and makes Texas to them more interesting than the land of the Cæsars. Statisticians tell us that in forty years Texas will be first among the states in population and the productions of wealth, wealth of the real kind, and not such as is created by boards of directors and the issuance of securities. These will not be forty years in the wilderness. Mighty achievements will be strewn all along the splendid highway of that forty years. Texas bankers, conservators, guardians, guides, soldiers and generals will lead in this mighty march of civilization and accomplishments. In the days of the future you will stand as you have stood in the past, for those things which are right, those things which are wise, those things which are progressive, and those things which promote the well-being, the contentment, the employment, and the happiness of your fellow countrymen. The banker is not merely a money lender. He is not merely a promoter. He is not merely a pilot, but he is all combined, and when the history of the next forty years is written it will be found that the modest Texas banker, about whom few speeches are made, and few memorials have been written, will be the man outside who has most wisely moulded public opinion. Until our lawgivers absorb true political wisdom, cease to harass the struggling enterprises of the state with needless legislation, permit co-operation in business, return to their earlier fair treatment of railroads, those great developers of waste territory, and while we cannot any longer give them sixteen sections of land to the mile, we can give them fair treatment, and oppose the rant of the demagogue with that high courage which dares to do right and to deal justly even towards those who have few friends. I have no fear but that the bankers of Houston and of Texas will always array themselves on the right side of every economic question. They know that nothing that is morally wrong is economically right. This is their history, and their past is our diagnosis of their future.

I feel that I have spoken long enough. I know that you would rather hear the Chevalier Webb throw bouquets at the ladies than to hear me throw flowers at you. I know that you want to hear of the lady who covered her overdraft with her own check, and sweetly hoped that she had caused the bank no inconvenience. I know you would rather hear him tell you how to make fair women know that both sides of a bank statement ought to come out even. I know you are anxious to have him bring back to your memories of the sentimental days of your youth; when your favorite poem was

"Oh woman, in our hours of ease Uncertain, coy and hard to squeeze."

I know that you are impatient for that modern Chesterfield, that pink of politeness, no pun is intended, who is alike at home among the floating four hundred, the swimming four thousand, the submerged four million. I mean the Chevalier Downs to receive the keys to the city for you. You need no key to our hearts; they are open to you always. I know that you long to hear that brilliant Chevalier of North Texas discuss taxation. Taxation is the life of the state, but the bane of the banks. If every species of property paid taxes in proportion as do the banks, there would be no tax problem to vex our statesmen, or produce a dearth of revenue. A man may be old, lame and rheumatic, but he will sprint like a yearling to get ahead of the tax assessor. He may be so soft in his upper story that he will play tag with the fellow who thinks he is a poached egg, but no obscurity of intellect will ever allow him to make a high tax assessment. I know you wish to hear from our wandering boy from Saint Louis, a few remarks on the cormorant and the commune. I know that you feel an interest in having some streaks of rust and some rights of way spread out before you by the gentleman from Austin, therefore, I must close.

Hospitality is one of the most pleasing, innocent and happy of human relations. The meeting of men who are animated by congenial ideals, and congenial occupations, is the acme of social life and social pleasure. This is such an occasion, you gentlemen to whom the state of Texas owes much, and the city of Houston owes more, but to whom with the true banking spirit we are anxious to increase our obligations, are welcome to our hospitality. Not the fervid hospitality of the oriental, or the frigid hospitality of the poles, but true southern hospitality, which places a proper appreciation upon the guest and proper respect for the host. We welcome you with true Texas hospitality, which is the bloom of southern hospitality. We welcome you with south Texas hospitality, which is the flower of Texas hospitality. When you return home, and among the dark days of coming depression which the logic of events seems to forecast in the low prices of great commodities, I do not mean wheat, the large number of the unemployed, the cessation of expanding enterprises, the government deficit, and the struggles and burdens necessary to make it up, in all of which you will bear your noble part, may the recollection of this occasion be with you as it shall be with us, a fragrant and

Is There Under-Taxation of Banks in Texas?

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: The subject assigned me for discussion is "Taxation: Do the Banks of Texas Pay Their Just Proportion of Taxes?" I feel sure that my audience will render a verdict for the affirmative of the proposition, because my audience pays the tax. This furnishes a practical, but not theoretical, knowledge of the subject. The political economist and the legislator have tried to unravel its intricacies. If I should attempt to give a mere outline of what has been written and spoken on this subject, that would be the greatest tax I could impose upon you. I will not attempt it, but will be brief in my remarks. Taxation is essential to the support of all civilized governments. And the higher the type of that civilization the more expensive its maintenance. Public schools, highways, hospitals, libraries and public buildings, are some of the attributes of a progressive government. And, moreover, it requires a large official force to conduct the affairs of all governments. The money necessary for this is collected from the citizens by taxation. This tax, under our laws, is supposed to be "equal and uniform" and is based upon the value of property, without discrimination as to any character of the property. This provision of the constitution is manifestly fair and just. And as much may be said of the ad valorem tax laws on our statutes. The difficulty arises in the application of the laws by the numerous taxing officials of our state. These officers each pursue arbitrary rules, radically at variance with uniformity. This condition is almost universal in every state. The Comptroller General of Georgia, in his report, says: "While there is no fairer or better mode of taxation than the ad valorem system properly and justly administered, there is none more oppressive or unjust and unequal when loosely or imperfectly executed." This is a true statement of the case. Every citizen should be willing and ready to "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" in the way of tax. True patriotic citizenship demands this sacrifice, without which government cannot exist. And without government the citizen cannot exist, because there would be no protection to life, liberty and property. On this proposition I assume, there can be no dissension. The dissension arises on the question of the tax being "equal and uniform." That is the fundamental law governing taxation; and, regarding which, believe, nearly all citizens are "law-abiding." But it is repugnant to any citizen to know that he is forced to contribute more than his just proportion of tax to the support of the government. And that this is true, in many instances, no one can doubt. This much is prefatory to my remarks concerning the taxation of banks. The direct taxation of banks had its origin about the beginning of the 19th century. The first state law, of this character, was the Georgia act of 1905. This was followed by other states, each differing in the method adopted. After the enactment of the national bank law, a material change was made in the method of taxing banks, which resulted in greater uniformity.

By O. E. Dunlap of Waxahatchie at the Houston Convention

However, uniformity in taxing banks is impossible under the present system. As heretofore stated, assessors pursue an arbitrary rule. If the party rendering and the assessor fail to agree upon the value of the property rendered, it is referred to a local board of equalization, and its action is final. This rule applies alike to county and municipal boards. In some states there are state boards of equalization, having appellate jurisdiction from county and municipal boards when the party rendering is not satisfied with the value fixed by said boards. Justice demands that the right of appeal should be given to property owners.

In truth, every state should have a state board of equalization, empowered to hear appeals from local boards. Our state constitution would have to be amended in order to permit the creation of such a board. With such a board uniformity, approximately, could be obtained in the rendering of most corporate property. This method is pursued by many states, and with fairly satisfactory results. I do not think there is any species of property which pays a higher tax than banks. Expressed in millions, the capital and surplus of the national banks of Texas is $60,000,000; of state banks, $11,000,000. These banks are all located in towns and cities. And it is a recognized fact that all property, so located, is taxed at a higher valuation than rural property. This excess in valuation varies from 25 to 50 per cent. Incorporated banks are taxed upon their shares of stock. The stock represents all the assets of the bank. At stated periods they are required to make and publish, under oath, statements of their condition. So that, even if they were disposed, there is no opportunity to conceal from the taxing officers the property subject to taxation. That there is unjust discrimination against banks, in most localities, by the taxing officers, is a generally admitted fact. While this discrimination is recognized as unjust yet it is not what the courts have held as being illegal discrimination. And on this question of discrimination there has been much judicial legislation. It is now the settled rule of law that a bank cannot be relieved of what is regarded as excessive valuation of its stock, unless that valuation, in fact, is in excess of the actual value of the stock.

If the taxing officer has permitted other property to be rendered below its value, this is a violation of the law respecting such rendition, but in no wise a ground for the reduction of the rendition of other property, provided such rendition does not exceed the value of the property. There is no reason why corporate property should be taxed at a higher value than any other class of property. The ownership is in the citizen as absolute as is the ownership of an acre of ground, a horse, or a cow.

In the case of Cummings vs. The Merchants' National Bank, of Toledo, Ohio, which is one of the leading cases on the question of discrimination against banks in taxation, the opinion of the court states: "It may be summed up in the statement, that assessors of real property, the assessors of personal property, and the auditor of Lucas county, in which is the city of Toledo, concurred in establishing a rule of valuation by which real and personal property, except money, was assessed at one-third of its value, and money or invested capital, at six-tenths of its value, and that the assessment of the shares of incorporated banks, as returned by the state board of equalization for taxation, to the auditor of Lucas county, was fully equal to the selling prices of said shares and to their true value in money." In this case there was a flagrant discrimination made by the taxing board. And the court gave the relief sought by the bank. The court reports of decision on questions of bank taxation show this discrimination against banks to be universal, in almost every state. So that, from these decisions, we are forced to conclude that banks pay more than their just proportion of tax.

The law governing the rendition of property for taxation varies very materially in many states. And the court decisions respecting taxation against banks, based on the respective state statutes, are frequently conflicting. Seligman, in his excellent work on taxation says, "The first constitutional injunction, that of uniformity in taxation, is flagrantly violated. Assessors are openly compelled to disregard their oaths, or to incur certain defeat at the next election. There is no pretense of complying with the law. In the annual report of State Assessors of New York, they state: "No board of officials, however diligent or however conversant they may be with the subject, can make an equalization which to themselves will be absolutely satisfactory. The strife between counties to reduce assessments has not ceased and in all probability will not, as long as assessors are elected, or selfishness be a passion in the human breast." As heretofore stated, a state board of equalization would do much to equalize and harmonize the discrimination between counties. Much of the legislation in various states, on taxation, is of a bungling and harmful nature to the best interests of the people. This arises from a lack of information and education on the part of legislators, respecting the subject of taxation.

This statement is in no wise intended as a reflection on the intelligence of legislative bodies. In truth, it requires an inclination and aptitude to master the dry details of many subjects submitted for legislation. And the complex question of taxation is one of them. I am fully conscious of the fact that there is a small minority in all legislative bodies who are informed on such matters, and when political passion and prejudice enters into the contest the uninformed majority pays but little heed to that minority. It would be more practical if such questions were first submitted to a committee of experts in that line before it was referred to a legislative body. The chief end to be sought, in justice to every tax payer, has been as clearly and logically stated by Adam Smith in his "Wealth of Nations" as it is possible to be stated. In fact, it is regarded as a classic on taxation. He says, "The subjects of every state ought to contribute to the support of the government, as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation." This crisp short statement expresses volumes. Put into practice the truths it enunciates, and wrangles over taxation would cease. That there is an evolution in methods of taxation, in America, all students of the subject will freely confess. And it is to be hoped that out of conflict and confusion a more perfect system will be evolved. But put not your faith in the man to do this, who goes to a political convention with a pocket full of free passes, sandwiched between which is an anti-free pass plank in the platform; or the one who is full on "stump oratory and bad beer" with a state wide submission plank in his pocket. Nor the one with a guaranty of deposit plank, who never had a deposit in bank. And, last but not least, the one with a full rendition of tax plank in his pocket, when his only liability is a poll tax. Far better place your faith in the man who is bold enough and big enough to do that which he believes is for the best interests of the people, regardless of platforms or politics. This is the real reformer—seldom the politician.

E. J. Jarl

It is the opinion of E. J. Jarl, People's Trust & Savings Bank of Galesburg, that if all the Illinois bankers come to the big A. B. A. convention at Chicago, in September, who are now planning to come, that more than one country bank will have to close up. He was in Chicago this week on business and reports business conditions in and around Galesburg as "sitting tight" waiting for developments, just as they are elsewhere.

Group Seven, Illinois

The third annual meeting of Group 7, Illinois Bankers, met at Taylorville, May 12th, with a fine program. W. T. Vandever welcomed the attendants and G. S. Connard of Decatur responded. The crops and business outlook were reported upon for each county and informal talks were indulged in by Secretary R. L. Kinaman of the I. B. A., George Woodruff of Joliet, and Frank T. Joyner of East St. Louis. In the evening Lucius Teter of Chicago and Lawrence Y. Sherman of Springfield were the orators of honor. Mr. Teter mentioned postal savings banks. There was a smoker at the Elks club, an automobile ride and a banquet at the Antlers hotel. Homer Bents is "home secretary," at Taylorville.

Group Seven is one of the "Successful" ones, with a big "S." W. E. Turner, of Taylorville, is chairman; Latham T. Souther, of Springfield, treasurer. J. B. Walker is chairman of the local association at Taylorville. The group includes the counties of Sangamon, Shelby, Christian, Macoupin, Moultrie, Macon and Montgomery.

Lynn H. Dinkins of New Orleans on Postal Banks

The people of the United States have before them a number of important questions pressing for settlement. Some of these are of a nature that demands prompt treatment, even though the solution thus reached be open to some degree of criticism hereafter. The same condition was aptly described by a celebrated English essayist who once wrote "A corrupt government is better than no government." Still other questions before us may better be adjusted by careful thought, due debate and minute investigation of the local conditions they involve.

Three important measures confront us in the field of finance:

First: We must determine a method to make our currency more elastic.

Second: We must decide in a broad, national way what kind of guaranty, if any, it is desirable that our government should afford bank depositors for the safety of deposits.

Third: We must answer whether or not the establishment of postal savings banks in this country, at this time, makes for the best interest of most of its citizens.

This third question is my excuse for appearing before you today. In my opinion, it is one of the problems to which we can well afford to devote the time required for a thorough investigation before committing ourselves to final conclusions.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the problem should be debated with the greatest good of the greatest number always clearly in view. We must remember that fairness demands that bankers be considered in this debate, only so far as they are a part of the whole people.

If postal savings banks can be shown to benefit the general public, we bankers should not only acquiesce in their establishment but we should actively further the movement to establish postal banks throughout the country. In my own opinion, postal savings banks will not result at this time in any good to the greatest number of the people. I base this opinion on considerations which promise pernicious results. The chief of these I should summarize under four or five heads.

Would not the establishment of these banks result disastrously for many retail merchants and others who deal on credit with the general public? The United States government will not submit to legal processes in execution of claims. Designing and dishonest persons bent on evasion could deposit their money in postal banks to the extent of several accounts and thereby place it beyond the reach of creditors. The Carter bill allows every man, woman and child over ten years of age to open an account and extend it to $1,000. A man desiring to outwit his creditors would need only to open an account for himself, another for his wife, others for his sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts and cousins. He may act, moreover, as trustee for other minors, and thus control all of the money so deposited.

2d. The proposed postal savings bank law would have a tendency to remove the money deposited from the immediate vicinity of the person who deposits it. Yet bank deposits in such a region as ours are vitally needed for our own use. This tendency would affect all growing communities where local banks lend their funds upon mortgage security and personal endorsement. The postal bank cannot have any money to lend. Its funds must be passed on to federal depositories. If there be no United States depository in the immediate vicinity, the money must be removed to some larger center. Would this not create a dearth of funds for local purposes? Would it not encourage the loan shark, who preys upon the people by requiring exorbitant rates of interest and large bonuses for such loans as he makes? Would the removal of local funds not cause local business to stagnate? Would it not stultify and strangle local enterprise?

3d. In new and growing communities, where regularly organized banks have not been established, the postal savings bank would be planted first and would doubtless prevent the organization of local banks. Would this situation not mean that new communities throughout the south and west would be retarded in development? A small bank established in a new community is often the means of bringing in outside capital, and it also conserves such local capital as may exist.

The proposed postal savings bank would mean that the United States government would engage in the banking business.

The past efforts of our government in this direction do not warrant a belief in a successful termination of the present venture.

The Freedman's Bank which was established by the government to assist the negro in attaining financial independence, owed its depositors more than $75,000 when it failed. That $75,000 is still unpaid. All of us realize that a government guaranty is no better than any other guaranty unless specific legal provisions are made for paying the liability from government funds.

4th. The chief reason for the passage of a postal savings bank bill at this time seems to rest upon the promise of President Taft, that the republican party would enact such a bill. All of us are, I am sure, proud of the president as a good citizen, proud of his record as a statesman and a patriot; but so far as my information extends he has had little experience in the handling of practical banking problems, and this, for the most part, in the Philippine Islands. It is quite likely that the establishment there of postal savings banks, or any other kind of solvent banks, would materially aid commercial development.

Before reaching a final decision, however, for this country, it seems to me the careful and thoughtful attention of credit men, merchants, and other business men throughout the union should be directed to the subject. Influence should be brought to bear upon every senator and representative for the protection of our growing communities against the evil effects of such postal savings bank legislation as the Carter bill embodies in the form it now presents to the United States congress.

If, in the future, the best interests of the whole people require the establishment of postal savings banks in this country, the change should, in my opinion, be accomplished through some such agency as is now operative in connection with the settlement of our currency problems.

Group Four of the Iowa Bankers Association held its annual meeting at Decorah, Iowa, May 6th. The meeting was called to order by D. B. Allen of Arlington, chairman of the group. Seventy-seven registered present. C. R. Carpenter of Fayette was elected chairman for the ensuing year, and J. M. Pollard of Strawberry Point was elected secretary. D. B. Allen, the retiring chairman, was recommended to the state meeting of the Iowa Bankers Association at Waterloo in June as a candidate for state association treasurer. Short speeches were made by several of the visiting bankers, after which automobiles were taken to the College Campus where a ball game between the Nebraska State University team and the Luther College team, of Decorah, was enjoyed. The game was an extra good one, the score being four to nothing, the Luther pitcher shutting out the Nebraska boys without a hit or a run for the entire nine innings. After the ball game the Decorah bankers entertained the visitors at a dinner at the Winneshiek Hotel. E. Curtin was toastmaster, and almost every banker outside of Decorah responded to a toast during the evening. The meeting was considered very successful. It was voted to meet next year at Oelwein, Iowa, on the invitation by Mr. Anders of that place.

Mississippi Bankers Meet at Columbus

Columbus, Miss., May 12.—The convention here was a huge success, and the bankers are off by special train for the tri-state convention tomorrow in New Orleans, where they will be the guests of the clearing house association. Henry L. Whitfield welcomed the visitors to Columbus yesterday morning, and J. W. McGrath of Brookhaven, responded. The annual president's address was delivered by Oscar Newton, of Jackson. Routine official reports were then received. In the afternoon Lucius Teter, fresh from Briar Cliff, opened out a few fresh stanzas on the evils of postal savings banks, and E. L. Rice spoke on the "Modern Pharisee," which is printed in full elsewhere in this issue. A call of congressional districts closed the session.

C. A. Johnston of Columbus led off on Wednesday on a currency topic debate, and the negative was introduced by Sol. Wexler, of New Orleans. This debate was the drawing card, and many bankers spoke. Mr. Johnston urged that all kinds of banks, both state and national, should issue a uniform currency, and he did it well. In concluding he said: "But a few years ago we had the cry for more currency, a wail from the cities to move the crops at harvest time, what we had being busy moving stocks and bonds all the time—an emergency currency. It was asserted that exigency number five had come. Thereupon the American Bankers Association took up the subject, and after a long time of quiet deliberation, but of very brief public discussion, they formed a committee, who styled themselves 'the currency commission.' Now, here was an association of all the banks of the Union undertaking the solution of a question affecting all banks, every citizen, every interest, and when that commission was pedigreed it was found to consist of one trust banker, one savings banker, one private banker, and thirteen national bankers. Thirteen was its hoodoo. It seemed they did not consider that any state banker had sense enough to serve, and when I read its report I was glad they took that view of it. They not only asked to have the government print and guarantee millions of new notes, issue them to national banks without security, but they refused to recognize their poor kin, and the little country national banker was left in the cold. Not only that, having established an aristocracy based on amplitude of surplus, they so esteemed themselves that they also recommended that the government deposit its daily receipts of money with them without any security. 'It was to laugh.'

"This report was too audacious for Congress, and it met scant courtesy. The panic of 1907 intervening, Congress, too, got rattled and passed a so-called emergency currency bill whose only frank feature is its title, 'An act to amend the national bank laws.' You have all read the little book called 'Three Weeks.' Now read this bill and tell me if you don't think it the sequel to it. You will have to read it several times to understand it, and when you do you will never understand why they passed it.

"Under this bill I understand five hundred millions of panic preventatives have been printed, and held as a menace to any depositor who dares to take on a scare and ask for his money. I verily believe if they knew of its existence they would be justified in getting scared. On the five hundred millions a tax rate of interest is to be charged, running from five to ten per cent but its issue is limited to the distressed rich; the poor need not apply. Under it the little states, and many of the Southern states, are barred. The Southern states will have to confederate, we have to re-establish 'the Confederate States,' so as to qualify to borrow this worse than confederate money.

"The wail of the wail is oftentimes heard. Ever since Moses was rescued from the rushes and raised on unmalted milk, the milk of human kindness has flowed for the distressed. At our last convention a distinguished member appealed to this association for help as against the case that was about to be established in his class. His remonstrance was against this very clause in the confederate money bill. You remember how his brother from the city scorned him and said, 'How dare you?' The convention took the view that the issuance of our currency is a national affair, and not a national bank prerogative.

"You adopted a resolution asking Congress to appoint a commission to study the question. I assume your resolution did the work, for fifty minutes later I read in the New Orleans paper that Congress had appointed one. That con-mission traveled all last summer from New York to the Holy Land, and some day will publish a book.

"I, too, have suffered; I have been in the crowd who were called 'silver idiots,' following our Moses like a nigger's dog when going coon hunting. I have been in the crowd who were called anarchists, greenbackers; have heard our blessed money called a 'rag baby,' but at last my turn has come—I have lived to see our traducers coddling a bastard of no sex, held in cold storage, in the incubator of its birth, and the time of whose death was decreed at its birthing. If you can get a copy, don't fail to read the act approved May 30, 1908. In asking that the currency be issued through all the banks alike, we shall offer the government the same bonds, the same high standard of character, of integrity, of success, and of patriotism. It is not a question of caste, nor of system, but of justice. I leave it with you."

Then came the great Sol. Wexler, he of many frays at the national conventions. He espoused the nationals, alone, and, like Mr. Johnston, did it well. In concluding he said: "From all of the foregoing, it must be apparent that a uniform currency is impossible, and I think it can be safely said that this part of the subject of this debate, as to whether or not we should have a uniform currency, is negatively disposed of. We now come to the question of whether our currency should be issued by the government, or by national banks or by all banks. It is my opinion that the government should continue to issue gold notes, or warehouse receipts for gold bullion actually on hand, such notes to be in large denominations only, so as to prevent their general circulation in order that they may constitute the basis of our credit, a solid foundation upon which full confidence may safely rest. These notes should either be issued by a central bank, in which the government should be interested, both as to capital and management, the remainder of the stock to be contributed by all banks throughout the country, in proportion to their respective capital; such a bank to have redemption agencies located throughout the country, at all convenient points, and such notes not to count as reserve for any bank, to insure their being hurried in to the redemption agencies as quickly as possible, to be exchanged for legal reserve money or book credit subject to check. Such a bank should rediscount or lend to all banks entitled to credit, their reasonable requirements, paying for the proceeds of such discounts in its circulation notes, which would thus be put in circulation. The amount of such notes outstanding would therefore naturally be always proportionate to the demand. There are, of course, many details to be worked out in connection with such an institution, and I have but briefly touched upon the main points and principles. The only possible argument against such an institution would be the danger of its becoming a political factor, which danger it is generally believed can be minimized. If it were deemed advisable not to have such a central bank and that currency should be issued by the individual banks, it would scarcely be feasible to have all banks enjoy such privileges, and it should be confined to banks in reserve and central reserve cities, the metropolis or center of a section being in good position to serve such a section. At the same time, I can see no great harm that could occur if all national banks were given the privilege of issue under proper restrictions, as under the reserve requirements to apply against such notes. No bank could expand its loans on them any more readily than at present on their deposits. I will state, however just here, that in view of the guaranty and other laws now being passed in various states, both unsound in principle and inimical to the banking business, the government should not permit any bank to do business except under a national charter. The government should exercise supervision over all chartered, joint-stock banks, and state banks just like state bank currency, should be a thing of the past. In connection with the currency problem, the government should cease to encourage banks to speculate in bonds, by forcing them to be used as a basis of circulation, and should issue its 3 or 2¾ per cent bonds in small denominations, for the savings of the multitude, and drop the impractical scheme of government savings banks.

At Briar Cliff

Most of the things reported upon and approved at the Briar Cliff meeting of the A. B. A. executive committee meeting last week have been fully covered in these columns, in the weekly summary of headquarter events. A few paragraphs will present the notable happenings of the meeting.

Charles B. Mills, of Iowa, was dubbed the "homeopathic sportsman," owing to his long puts and short drives at golf. He didn't win the cup. It went to S. H. Burnham, of Bryansburg, Nebraska.

P. C. Kauffman, he of the aureole, was in from the Alaska-Yukon trail, and invited everybody to join the Chapter special at Chicago, for the A. I. B. convention at Seattle the last week in June.

There was a banquet and a dance. First honors in the ball room were divided between John L. Hamilton, of Illinois, and Logan C. Murray, of Kentucky. At the banquet chairman F. O. Watts had a little preliminary practice as toastmaster. His real effort will come at the Chicago convention.

Vice-President Lewis E. Pierson, of New York, had a few words to say on order bills of lading, the first time he ever has been known to mention such a subject at an A. B. A. gathering. It was a great surprise.

Good! The protective committee agreed to renovate its ancient system and appointed a committee. Now let there be added all the paid secretaries and a few live fidelity bond men, and we can have results. A good system of rewards will get all law officers in line. Regular law officers hate private detectives worse than they do the real criminals.

Of course, the dopy old compositor on the Financier had to make Secretary Hanhart "the precise," report the savings of "the whole American people" as "over nine million dollars." The figures read $9,466,411,488, and so far as any man can know, are correct. Oh yes! Lucius Teter spoke on postal savings banks, a thing which many think probable he could do in his sleep.

President George M. Reynolds told the committee that the Chicago A. B. A. convention, September 13th-18th, is to be a hummer, and that preparations are going on nicely in his home town.

Secretary Farnsworth reported 10,076 paid members, and that's the world's record, as well as the American record. Here's a part of his report, too good to be lost:

"In accordance with the action taken by the council in May, 1908, we now have under one roof all of the adjuncts of the association. The savings bank section lease having expired on this day, the section is now comfortably housed in our offices. It is not necessary for me to dwell on the importance of this move and to say that it is good business policy to have all of the transactions of the association carried on from one point. It is a matter of convenience to members of the association, and also more economical. To accomplish this it was necessary to secure additional office room. This however, gives much better offices for the sections and provides additional space for the association, which was required. In that connection, it might be well to explain that the rent and expenses of maintaining these additional offices are paid from the general funds, and are not charged to the sections."

Another little bouquet from the Farnsworth report reads:

"The office of the general counsel which has been so ably filled by Thomas B. Paton during the past year, and which is one of our new departments, has been most successful. Mr. Paton's long experience in work of this kind, with his patience, thoroughness, and sincerity, makes him a very valuable officer of the association, and his services are greatly appreciated by the membership as is shown by the demands upon his time."

A Tip to State Secretaries

The youngsters among the State Secretaries can well sit at the feet of the dean-of-all-secretaries, J. M. Dinwiddie, of Iowa. He has just issued a circular letter which for logic, clear rhetoric and aptness, so far as is known, is about the best ever issued. Here are the letter and the two blanks.

For some months past I have been greatly puzzled over a certain question, and not being able to solve it, I am going to appeal to you for assistance.

The question is, "Why will any Iowa bank withhold its membership from the Iowa Bankers Association?" The reason that this question is a puzzling one is because of the fact that by joining the association and paying the five dollars annual dues, any bank may save all the way from four to forty dollars per year in the expense of caring for its time lock and in burglary and surety bond premiums.

Now to help me solve this question, I am going to ask you to fill out the enclosed blank, giving the reasons why you are not a member of the Iowa Bankers Association.

If when you come to think about it, you find it difficult to do this, you may fill out the other blank I am enclosing and return it to me with your draft for five dollars, upon receipt of which I will issue to you a certificate of membership showing dues paid to June 1st, 1910. I am enclosing stamped envelope, and hope for an early reply.

----- Iowa, ----- 1909

J. M. DINWIDDIE, Sec'y,
Iowa Bankers Association,
Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

In compliance with your request, you will find below reasons why this bank is not a member of the Iowa Bankers Association.

Notice how nicely Mr. Dinwiddie traps the unwary laggard. He says "if you find it difficult" to fill out the five line blank, "fill out the other" which is a shorter and easier way out of the jungle. The second blank reads;

I hereby apply for membership in the Iowa Bankers Association, and hand you herewith draft for Five Dollars in payment of membership fee and first annual dues.

Association will hold its next convention at Waterloo, Iowa, June 10th and 11th. The program is almost completed and will be as good as they have ever had. The association has grown through an unusual effort on the part of the secretary to bring in the non-members and he can this year show a growth of one hundred, possibly more. Iowa has 1,300 members, full paid, and still is the largest association in the country. The association is in good condition and we believe is proving itself to be of worth to the general banker, but "for the life of us we cannot understand why a few should remain out." The quotation is from Mr. Dinwiddie. He is trying one more tack to get the others in or get a refusal from them. Results ought to be good. Iowa for all these years has sent all reports and look-out cards to non-members as well as to those of the fold, in hopes to draw them in. It has proven a failure, a misdirected charity. Other states have tried the same plan but they should be promptly cut off from all benefits. Iowa has justly a great organization and it will increase in importance to its paid membership if the deadheads are completely eliminated.

Our Public Schools

The eloquent D. R. Forgan created a sensation at the Y. M. C. A. banquet by which that organization celebrated its 51st anniversary in this city on Tuesday night. The daily press says that those present were "inexpressibly shocked" because Mr. Forgan assailed the kind of work being done in the public schools of Chicago. Mr. Forgan, as usual, was very earnest, almost radical. He is reported to have said that the Chicago boys of to-day were no more fit for business positions than pupils of the kindergartens; that hardly a high school graduate appeared who could write a grammatical and correctly spelled letter, and that, in short, the Chicago public school system was a failure.

This is a subject close to the hearts of many of us. A little group of ten fathers in Hyde Park recently investigated the work done by all accessible schools in that residence district and decided that the public schools do the best work. Two or three of the ten started out with the very opinions held by Mr. Forgan. To test out the matter of applicants for positions who "say" they have had high school training, three advertisements were inserted for young men to do office work. Nearly twenty were selected who claimed to have "finished" high school. Not one really had graduated as was determined by investigation. Three had not even graduated from grammar grade. Seven had gone only to private school below high school standard and the rest had had a "little" high school, some in private and some in the public schools. The whole thing misrepresented or libeled the Chicago public schools.

Group Two, Wisconsin

The fifth annual meeting of Group Two Wisconsin bankers, will meet this year at Madison, on May 19th. The sessions will be held in Mendota Yacht Club, and an interesting program has been provided. James W. Hutchinson is president of the group and will preside. The delegates will be welcomed to the city by Mayor Schubert, and L. S. Hank will speak for the Madison banks. Among the addresses for the meeting is one by R. L. Stone of Milwaukee on "The Credit Department of the Bank." Herman Grotphorst of Baraboo will address the meeting on "Depository Guaranty." President Geo. E. Roberts of the Commercial National, of Chicago, is to be one of the speakers, and W. J. Hobbins, of Madison, will address the convention on "Bank Legislation." There will be a question box and visitors will be expected to discuss each of the five pertinent banking problems, which will be proposed. For entertainment there will be a boat ride on Lake Mendota in the afternoon, followed by an informal dinner at the University Club. In the evening there will be a talkfest and smoker in the Rathskeller of the club.

Texas Banking Conditions

will see an institution in which is enshrined, at least in some measure, the benefactions of the banker. This is just as it should be, and I mention it here because I honestly believe that it is worthy a place in our records.

Thanks

In conclusion I wish to thank the association for the confidence reposed in me, as well as for the honor bestowed in placing me in the highest office in the gift of our membership. If I have made blunders or in any way failed to meet the demands of this place of honor and trust, your generosity has passed my imperfections by. If I have done well in any particular your hearty co-operation is the thing which has made it possible for me to do so. While our association together has been largely a matter of business it has not disregarded the social and even fraternal relations. I assure you that when the gavel shall have passed from my hand to that of my successor it will be with the fondest hope that he will make yet a far better presiding officer than I have been.

Among the principal addresses made by prominent bankers, not all of which can be crowded into one regular issue of THE CHICAGO BANKER, were the following:

"Corporations; Their Functions and Relations," H. P. Hilliard, president Central National, St. Louis; "Railroads and Their Relation to Capital," Hon. W. A. Steadman, Austin; "Legislation, Its Tendency and Effect Upon the Development of the State," R. D. Gage, vice-president First National, Fort Worth; "Woman; Her Position in the Banking World," S. Webb, president Albany National, Albany; "Texas," Festus J. Wade, president Mercantile National and Mercantile Trust Company, St. Louis; "Disorganization and Effects—Co-operation and Results," S. W. Fisher, attorney Texas Bankers Association; "Bank Taxation—Do the Banks of Texas Pay Their Just Proportion of Taxes?" O. E. Dunlap, president Citizens' National Bank, Waxahatchie, and "A New Departure in Federal Finance," E. F. Gurney, vice-president First National, Fremont, Neb.

There were about 700 in attendance and it was voted the best convention ever held by Texas bankers.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Washington, May 12.—Spokane is included in the itinerary of the Texas Bankers Association on its eighth annual tour, beginning at Houston July 3d and occupying 21 days, thus enabling its members to visit many places of interest on land and sea. Levi Grant Monroe, secretary of the Spokane chamber of commerce, which entertained the Texans on their last visit to the Northwest, has received advices from J. W. Hoopes, secretary of the commercial club, that stops will be made at Los Angeles, the Yosemite valley, San Francisco, going thence by water to Portland, Seattle and Victoria, B. C., thence to Spokane, Denver and numerous other points, including the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. The party will travel in a special train over the Santa Fe, the Harriman and the Hill lines. A stop of several days will be made at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, Seattle, also at least one day in Spokane and the nearby country. The bankers of Spokane and the chamber of commerce will entertain the visitors while in the city.

D. R. Forgan and Others Visit the Northwest

David R. Forgan and Richard C. Hall, former presidents of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and a number of bankers will be among the heads of 40 business enterprises on the "trade embassy" from Chicago to the northwest, leaving in a special train May 30th, and arriving here June 6th or 7th. The party will make a stay of one day and night in this city as guests of the Spokane chamber of commerce. The entertainment will include a reception and banquet in the Hall of the Doges and excursions by automobiles to the irrigated districts in the Spokane valley, in which much interest is centered at this time. The valley contains 100,000 acres of irrigable lands, capable of supporting more than 15,000 families. The visitors will go from here to Seattle, where they will be representatives of Chicago at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, and it is probable that the management of the fair will set aside one day as "Chicago Day" in their honor.

Title Guaranty Company

Title Guaranty Company of Spokane, recently incorporated for $50,000, has a crew of 45 abstractors copying the records of Spokane county under the direction of Henry J. Weeks who compiled the county eminent domain record for the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Company. It is expected to complete the work early next year. Fifty-five real estate brokers and attorneys are identified with the company, which is headed by Lawrence Jack, acting president and vice-president. Captain Robert A. Koontz, formerly clerk of Spokane county, is secretary, and A. H. Young is treasurer. The system employed is a complete innovation in the methods of abstracting. When the plant is fully installed the company will be enabled to write a complete abstract of any parcel of real estate in five minutes, and without going to the records in the courthouse. The company guarantees the title of property listed in its indices.

Mrs. Coolidge is Dead

Mrs. Emma Scriber Coolidge, wife of Alfred Coolidge, president of the Colfax National Bank of Colfax, Wash., and a director of the Traders' National Bank here, died at her home in Spokane, April 26th. The burial took place at Colfax. Mrs. Coolidge has been prominent in social and benevolent circles since 1883. Besides her husband she is survived by a son, Dolph Coolidge, a cashier of the Tacoma State Bank, and two minor children.

Capital Stock of Banks

Capital stock of banks in North Yakima, Wash., is $609,900; the surplus and undivided profits are $359,485; the deposits are $4,087,875; loans and overdrafts are $2,751,834. The total of bonds and other securities is $744,041, and the total of the cash and exchange is $1,505,409. The city is sixth in the state, and this is also the position of Yakima county. The First National Bank heads the list with a capital stock of $100,000; surplus of $154,152.96; deposits of $1,613,740.58; overdrafts, etc., of $924,510.49; bonds and other securities of $492,001.31, and cash and exchange of $499,935.96. The bank is credited with a building house, furniture and fixtures valued at $43,000 and other real estate of $6,945.

Candidates for Superintendent of Banks

Candidates for superintendent of banks and for the positions of deputies under the new state banking law are springing up all around. The governor has announced that he will make no appointments, at least until August. Nevertheless the applications are going in rapidly. J. B. Gallarneault, of Aitkin, A. P. White, of Bemidji, and A. L. Roth, of the Second National at St. Paul, have been mentioned for the first position.

Re-elected Auditor

Fred P. Greene, who was re-elected for the second term as auditor of Spokane county last November, has resigned to become business manager of the Spokane Title Company. He is succeeded by R. W. Butler, formerly chief deputy. Mr. Greene was appointed by State Auditor Clausen to the position of chief examiner under the state bureau of uniform accountancy created by the uniform accountancy bill passed by the last legislature, but declined the position.

Banking Notes

H. B. Humason, assistant cashier of the Second National, has gone to West Baden, Ind., for three weeks.

John R. Mitchell, president of the Capital National, has been elected vice-president of the Business League of St. Paul. Kenneth Clark, president of the Merchants National, was made member of the executive committee.

Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank, has gone to the Coast to recuperate his health.

Mrs. B. F. O'Neill, wife of B. F. O'Neill, a banker at Wallace, Idaho, has gone to Chicago to join her father, Thaddeus Winter of Pasadena, on a trip to Europe, where they will join Mrs. O'Neill's sons.

Fred E. Callister of Spokane who was several years with the Iowa State Savings Bank of Fairfield, is visiting relatives in Iowa.

The First National, of Fargo, N. D., has enlarged its banking room, and installed a third teller.

The Pharisee and the Banker

A brilliant and interesting paper by E. L. Rice of Memphis, before the Mississippi Bankers at the Columbus convention

It will not be my purpose to advise the Secretary of the Treasury how to manage the finances of the United States for the next four years, neither do I purpose to suggest impossible plans for relieving improbable financial situations. I shall only advance the very commonplace ideas suggested by my subject relating to men in general and to bankers in particular.

The name, or rather the epithet of "Pharisee" has been considered by most of us from our earliest days in Sunday school as synonymous with hypocrisy and deception. But the Pharisee, like another individual who is the subject of unlimited abuse but who is said to be not as black as he is painted, has never had his day in the court of public opinion and never been heard through counsel. While condemning his faults, as I purpose to do, it is only ordinary justice to give him credit for his virtues. He rigidly observed all the ceremonies and ritual of the ancient faith. He contributed regularly to the purposes of his religion, one-tenth of his income. He strictly complied with all the external requirements of his creed. Had he lived in the present day, while he would not have hesitated to engage in the manufacture of wooden nutmegs, he would have opened each day's operations with prayer and closed it with the long meter doxology.

In its original derivation, the word "Pharisee" means one who separates himself from his fellow men and declines to take part in public affairs. In this regard the ancient type has many followers, but I am not prepared to say before a Mississippi audience that a want of interest in politics is a special peculiarity or fault of its citizens. A participation in all questions concerning the welfare and well being of the state seems to be the natural heritage of all native or imported Mississippians. I may go even further and say that the average American citizen is never found wanting when the time comes to express his political opinion, but the soundness of his judgment frequently is perverted by the reckless and often unfounded statements of political Pharisees, who seem to be lineal descendants of the ancient model, and who are continually giving thanks that they are not as other men, even these relentless bankers and bloated bondholders. The course adopted by these guardians of the public is thus described by a New York newspaper:—

"The new way is to look around until you find some abuse, picture it forth to the people as a scaly monster, belabor it until you have attracted attention and made yourself popular as a deliverer of the enslaved, then rush to Congress with the suggestion of a bill to draw the teeth of the monster and tie his legs. Then make a prodigious fuss over your achievement in speech and writing and leave the law-making body to work out the statutory solution. If the legislators raise constitutional objections, denounce them as traitors and slaves of the trusts. Few practical reforms are thus achieved, but it is a first rate way to make political capital."

In one particular only is this sarcastic advice erroneous in its statement of fact. The suggested plan is not "new" or original, and the picture has no charm of novelty. Other generations have heard the same discordant tones, have listened to the same mournful predictions and have lived to witness the downfall of the prophet and the confounding of his creed. In the natural repetition of history, the same conditions will doubtless recur, and in the meantime it is well to consider the evil resulting from careless criticism as well as the injustice done to the wrongfully accused.

It is impossible within a reasonable limit of time to discuss in detail, or even superficially, the various causes leading to financial panics, but all are attended with a general loss of confidence by the people in the banking institutions of the country. If this lack of confidence is justified by the facts, then the banks deserve the censure they receive, but if not, then the critics who inspire it will some day learn that the comparison of the camel to the needle's eye can be applied to others besides the possessors of money. But this punishment will come too late to benefit the bankers or those whose welfare they represent. The financier of these times cannot afford to depend for defense on either the conscience or the punishment of his accuser. He, above all other men, is obliged to understand the questions arising every day in the growing progress of the country, so that he can avoid the real and dispel the fear of imaginary dangers which are continually presented to the public mind. His duty is no longer determined by the limits of his counting house or the boundaries of his home town. The inventions of the last century have brought us nearer to London, Chicago and New York than we once were to our adjoining counties. The events of foreign countries are no longer simply matters of interesting news, but are matters of as essential importance to the banker of an inland country town as to the Bank of England. Under these circumstances and in view of the harsh and often unjust, if not dishonest, attacks made on modern banks and banking methods, no banker can afford in justice to himself and those who trust in his judgment, to ignore the indications of current events all over the world, and thus prepare himself to discriminate between the criticism of the vicious and the warning of the wise.

In fact there is no man whose citizenship is so completely cosmopolitan and whose good deeds are so seldom rewarded as are the members of our profession. The victorious general, the successful navigator, the eminent statesman, the author, the inventor and every other type of man who in his day and generation has conferred a benefit on mankind has been the gratified recipient of praise from his applauding countrymen, but I have yet to learn of votes of thanks from an appreciative parliament or medals of honor from a grateful Congress to those whose faithful efforts in time of financial danger have been quite as valuable to the country as the winning of a battle or the writing of a book. Yet instances of meritorious services are neither few nor unrecorded.

In the latter part of the seventeenth century the political and religious future of Europe was hanging by a hair. The titanic game between William of Orange and the Grand Monarch of France had begun. Alarming rumors of an invasion by soldiers coming from beyond the English channel had so terrified the money lenders of London that the English government was glad to borrow money at fifteen per cent to support the expenses of its army and navy. At this critical time, William Patterson, a Scotchman of humble birth and early disadvantages, proposed the financial plan which furnished funds for the successful support of a war which established religious freedom on English soil and liberated the country from the threatened control of France. The financial embodiment of the idea of William Patterson is to-day the Bank of England, but its originator died in obscurity and distress, leaving behind him nothing more than a recognized but unpaid claim for more than ninety thousand dollars against the people he had served so well.

At a later time and within the vivid memory of living men the states of the North and the states of the South joined issue in a struggle in which each sincerely believed they were right and their opponents wrong. This is no time, if in fact there ever was a time, to indulge in a discussion that would have a tendency to reawaken the bitter feeling that once existed on both sides. Our Northern brethren now concede to us and we concede to them an honesty of motive and sincerity of purpose in all that was done. Entertaining these feelings we can admire the patriotism of the Northern bankers in the counting house as well as of the Northern armies in the field.

In 1861 the United States treasury was practically empty, and the government found itself facing the serious situation of civil war. In those days, as in the present, it was easier to make inflammatory speeches than to raise money. The first financial movement of the Secretary of the Treasury was to negotiate a loan of one hundred and fifty million dollars in three installments. The banks of New York, Philadelphia and Boston subscribed and paid for the first installment of $50,000,000.00 without a dime of profit to their stockholders or themselves. The fact that these banks trusted in the final success of the northern cause and supported their opinion with their money inspired a confidence whose influence and value to the government can hardly be exaggerated.

Whether the ultimate success of the cause supported by these bankers of the North was fortunate or unfortunate is not for us to consider or discuss. It is enough for us to know that in that anxious time the bankers of the North were true to their convictions, and when weighed in the balance were not found wanting.

But the limit of time fixed by my intention, if not your patience, is approaching. On the current financial questions of the day I have not pretended to offer any advice, even if I had deemed myself competent to do so. In the future, as in the past, these problems will be solved as they arise, by the conservative judgment and sound sense of men who in the future, as in the past, will amply vindicate the character of our calling.

We are not afraid of legislation which is based on the unperverted intelligence of the American people. We apprehend no danger from the sober second thought which always follows unnecessary alarm. We are now and always content to abide by the judgment of those who know us and with whom at last is the final determination. For the government of this state and of this country does not abide in the halls of Congress, though one of its presiding officers would like to assume it; it does not reside behind the pillared portico of the White House; though its recent occupant seemed to think so.

Bankers, like all other men, commit errors and make mistakes. We lay no claim to the wisdom of Solomon or the infallibility of the pope. We know that there are and have been dishonest bankers—not many but some—here and there one, just as we are willing to admit that there are and have been honest politicians—not many but some, here and there one. But judged by the record of the past we know our efforts have not been in vain. Comparing the spirit of the modern Pharisee who condemns the past and misrepresents the present with that of the modern banker who bravely faces the present and looks to the future with hope, we can confidently expect that we will be justified in the judgment of the people rather than those who spend their time in enlarging the borders of their phylacteries and waste their lung power in thanking God that they are not as other men.

New Kansas Guaranty Scheme

Topeka, Kas., May 4.—A charter has been granted to the Bankers' Deposit Guaranty and Surety Company, organized by national bankers, chiefly for the insurance of bank deposits. Its capital is fixed at $500,000 and its headquarters at Topeka.

The purposes of the company are to insure and guarantee the payment of deposits in state and national banks to their depositors, and to invest in bank securities, assets, including real estate, and guarantee fidelity and faithful performance by the banks.

Bank deposits up to the amount of the capital and surplus will be insured for 50 cents on the $1,000 per year, while deposits over that amount must pay $1 per $1,000.

Otto Naegele, president of the Germania Bank, says: "I should say that Minneapolis will have between 500,000 and 600,000 inhabitants in 1915. I base my opinion on the rapid growth in the last forty years that I have lived here."

Texas Bankers at Houston

Houston, Texas, May 12.—Little wonder the entertainment committee of the Houston Clearing House had to ask for "time." The two day convention as planned was extended to three, partly on account of the great program provided and partly on account of the social side being so generously provided by the Houston bankers. The beginning was early on Monday with an address of welcome, seldom equaled, by Mr. McAshan, which is printed in full stalled last year has worked well. The anti-rebate law prevents Texas bankers from taking full advantage of such insurance business and time lock cleaning as are so profitable in the more liberal states.

Mr. Hoopes reported that "for the first time in a number of years a well organized band of professional safe blowers has been operating in this state. The protective committee has been put to a great deal of expense in the matter of attempting to place these parties under arrest and secure their conviction. It is often found necessary to employ special counsel to assist in the prosecution of these professional criminals, as in many places the state's attorney is not a man of sufficient experience to successfully cope with the attorneys employed by the criminals. An association of this size should have more funds at its disposal in order to promptly prosecute work of this class. On the appearance of the yeggmen in the state the United Surety Co., which I represent writing burglary insurance, authorized a reward of $200.00 for the arrest and conviction of each and every burglar operating upon any of our members holding their policy."

Mr. Hoopes told of the strenuous times the legislative committee had in killing off the foolish, populist bills in the legislature. Among the big wigs present are George M. Reynolds of Chicago, Festus J. Wade and H. P. Hilliard of St. Louis, and J. G. Wakefield, Chicago.

Oscar Wells of the Commercial National Bank is chairman of the entertainment committee and one of the principal features of the week was the trip down the ship channel, on Tuesday. Commodore George L. Glass and Fleet Captain Reed Waddell of the Houston Launch Club furnished a fleet of boats to carry the delegates to Seabrook, where they were given an entertainment at the popular club house.

The bankers left Harrisburg about 10 o'clock Tuesday morning and the first stop was made at the San Jacinto battlefield, where they remained an hour or two. Dinner was served and the journey continued to Seabrook and in the evening a banquet and entertainment were tendered the visitors at the club house. At 10 o'clock a special train brought the delegates to Houston. Elaborate arrangements had been made for the event of Tuesday evening and it Probably the sessions would not have ended to-night but for the large crowd who wished to be off for New Orleans to the big tri-state convention which opens there tomorrow by the bankers of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The principal addresses will be found printed elsewhere in this edition.

Secretary J. W. Hoopes reported 75 new members during the year, making 946 in all. The capital and surplus of banks which are members, no account being taken of private banks, are $83,943,800, while the non-member banks represent but $4,000,000 in capital and surplus. # The Alabama Convention at Mobile

Mobile, May 12.—The veteran Gen. J. W. Whiting headed the committee on entertainment and their work was well done. Every thing was in readiness when the bankers arrived and their welcome to the city was in masterful hands. It was Hon. J. C. Rich who proffered the hospitality of Mobile. Louis B. Farley, president of the Farley National, at Montgomery, responded in a brief talk about which the bankers still are talking. He revived the days of punning, and in a humorous way brought in the names of the banks of Mobile and of many of their leading officials. To those who knew the persons and institutions referred to it was very entertaining. Mr. Farley said in concluding:

"As your guests, gentlemen, we accept your richly presented hospitalities and rejoice with you that you have your "Hall" of fame with associated celebrities. We look upon your "Lions" (Lyons) and your "Bucks," (Buck) and their harmless companions as thoroughly trained pets, and as we hold in our own hand the key to the cage of your beautiful city, we shall delight to mingle among you alike, promising to gracefully accept your silver souvenirs and to turn off the gas before we talk in our sleep. We shall pluck with delight the graceful grapes from the Cawthon Vineyard, and will eat of your honey and drink of your milk (and champagne) from the Hervey farms, as we are told they cost just the same.

We shall make no effort when inspecting the menagerie to get out of the way of the blind tigers, for the High Sheriff has decreed otherwise. When our short sojourn with you is ended, we will give a rousing three cheers to dear old Mobile, and wish that it might be that "Here we rest."

Secretary McLane Tilton made an interesting report, evading all the purely routine. He claimed for his state association that "Thanks to this association, Alabama is fortunate in her state banking laws. After a considerable investigation I feel safe in asserting that the rigor of her statutes and the effectiveness of their enforcement easily entitles us to a place among the leading states in the union and leaves nothing to choose from, so far as relative strength is concerned, between state banks operating under Alabama laws and

Alabama banks operating under the national system. What criticism can be directed against either can in the main be directed against both. Each have their own peculiar elements of strength and weakness, each their own peculiar advantages and handicaps. Both are alike anxious to do everything possible and practical to safeguard the interests of depositors and much may be done with united action.

"Our bank examinations must be improved by the appointment of more examiners and one way to get them is for the banks to assume the expense of necessary additions to the force by assessments levied in proportion to resources. State banks should also be compelled to publish statements coincident with the comptroller's calls, as many voluntarily do, and examinations of banks operating branches should cover the parent and branches simultaneously. A defective examination, which lends the shadow of the state's approval without its substance, is worse than no examination at all. New York has two measures we could adopt with advantage, their savings bank and liquidation acts. The American Bankers Association has prepared and recommended for passage several bills whose complete texts will be published with our proceedings. These have already been passed in many states and concern the following subjects: punishment of false stories affecting banks, punishment for drawing checks without funds, punishment for burglary with explosives, limiting time liability for payment of forged or raised checks, defining competency of notaries, fixing maturity of paper and regulating transfer of stock certificates."

Like all other conscientious secretaries Mr. Tilton confesses that "I am at a loss to understand why these banks decline to avail themselves of the advantages of membership and are unwilling to share in the work which is of benefit to members and non-members alike. Surely the trifling sum charged for dues cannot be their objection, nor their failure to recognize the value of the service rendered. Whatever the cause, it is now up to the group vice-presidents to discover, overcome it, and bring the delinquents into the fold."

Mr. Tilton finds banks will buy "cheap" insurance rather than patronize the state association at a fair price. Standard rates are "cut" by unscrupulous agents just as they are in Illinois. Concluding Mr. Tilton says: "Speaking both as your secretary and an insurance writer who has gladly surrendered quite a volume of private business to the association's agency, I see in our insurance department one of the strongest reasons for our existence as an organization and I predict the day is not far distant when we will demonstrate this in striking fashion. I wish to thank those who have patronized the department, assure them they will never have cause to regret their action and express the hope that many others will not be slow to follow their wise example."

T. H. Rennie of Pell City read a valuable paper urging further industrial development in the state. E. J. Buck gave a talk and Chas. H. Treat of Washington read a paper. Lynn H. Dinkins' paper is printed in full elsewhere. John B. Weakley, a Birmingham lawyer of repute, read a treatise on Alabama public securities. Secretary F. E. Farnsworth of New York was present and spoke. The entertainment features were varied and fine. The delegates then took a train to participate in the tri-state convention at New Orleans on tomorrow, the 13th.

Bankers Arraigned

The grave charges brought in court recently, against the officers of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, are about to be tried in court. It comes up in an attempt to set aside the will of the late octogenarian, D. B. Shipman, who left his estate of $1,500,000 in the bank's charge, in the shape of a trust fund, to be used in charity.

Mr. Shipman was 86 years old when he made his will and the court charges are very severe. In the declining years of his life, it is asserted. Mr. Shipman became acquainted with the president of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank and certain stockholders and officers, and that the latter "by flattery and other arts and influences" induced Shipman to place confidence in the bank.

To win his confidence, it is charged, certain of the officers and directors made him a director in the bank, although he was 83 years old and so nearly blind he could hardly read.

Among the defendants are: John J. Mitchell, president of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, and Attorneys Max Baird and James C. Hutchins, counsel for the institution.

Saxe & Hogle

The great National Cash Register Company, of Ohio, often has been referred to as a training school for business men. Graduates from its courses are to be found in every branch of newly established business. In January, Messrs. Saxe & Hogle, with twelve or fourteen years' experience as agents and district managers with the N. C. R. opened a Chicago agency for the Wales Visible Listing and Adding Machine, manufactured by the Adder Machine Company at Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania. Sales began to multiply in a geometrical rather than an arithmetical progression and the general sales manager, John P. Hunter, saw that it would be advisable to give these experienced gentlemen a larger territory and they already have been made general distributors for Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Northern Minnesota, and the northern peninsula of Michigan. Mr. Saxe is very proud of the Wales Visible Machine, and already has a number of demonstrators at work taking orders. Their Chicago headquarters will be at 161 State Street, from which point they gladly will mail literature relating to their machine.

A SIX THAT IS A SIX

"I have been driving a six for three months, and I cannot see that it is better than our four."

This statement was made to us at the automobile show by a salesman for a company that makes both fours and sixes. In less than an hour that young man had been shown. He was shown a self-starting, sweet-running car such as he had never seen before. He was shown flexibility that opened his eyes, and a hill-climbing performance that caused him to sit up and declare:

"Well, it must be that we don't know how to make sixes and that the Winton Company does know how."

And that, very likely, is the real answer.

Some people can make a very good-looking flying machine, but unfortunately the thing won't fly.

Most anybody can put six cylinders together and call the result a "six," but unfortunately it may not do the beautiful things that the advertising says it will.

Perhaps that's why some producers of both fours and sixes would much rather have you buy a four and ask no questions about their "six."

But—and note this statement—the Winton Company hasn't made a four-cylinder car since June, 1907. That is because the

WINTON SIX

so far excels four-cylinder cars that we would feel guilty were we to try to sell fours against our own knowledge and conviction that the Six is infinitely the better car.

We are not hedging between fours and sixes, hoping to get you "coming or going." We stand for sixes and sixes only. We make sixes exclusively. We have the strongest confidence in the Winton Six because we know how wonderfully good it is.

Of course, if you won't be shown, we cannot do business with you. But if you are open-minded, if you want the best there is, it will take but very few minutes to make you as enthusiastic over the real merit of a real six as we are, as enthusiastic as Winton Six owners are; and they, we venture to say, are the happiest motor car owners in America.

And the price—that's convincing too. Five passenger, 48.6 horse-power Winton Six at $3000. No better car anywhere at any price.

Write today for literature. Winton Six catalog throws new light on sixes, gives facts and avoids platitudes.

dent of the association, I appointed the usual standing committees as well as those created by the twenty-fourth convention. You will doubtless receive reports from these committees during this session. Learning that the chairman of District No. 2 had declined to serve, I requested Mr. Joseph Hirsch of Corpus Christi to fill the vacancy. This action on my part was ratified by the Executive Committee.

Before leaving the state in the month of July for a vacation, I requested vice-president J. W. Butler, to assume the active duties of the office of president during my absence, which he did to my entire satisfaction, and I wish now to make public acknowledgment of his kind service. His familiarity with the duties of the office was my reason for appointing him.

It having developed that a band of swindlers and robbers was operating in the state, it was thought best to re-employ Mr. W. A. Boyd as detective for the association. You will find from his report that he has been very active and has rendered substantial service to our membership. Mr. Boyd's employment was ratified by the Executive Committee which met in Waco on Nov. 26, 1908.

By resolution passed at the last meeting of the association the Executive Committee was authorized to employ an attorney to represent the association and its individual members. The Executive Committee, at its meeting referred to above, appointed a committee with authority to carry out the purpose of the resolution. Mr. S. W. Fisher of Austin was employed for the remainder of the associational year. I understand from him and our secretary that he has rendered considerable service and that he will make a report during this session, after which the body can pass upon the wisdom of employing his successor.

Our secretary and treasurer have been active in their efforts to enlist every bank and banker in the state to become members. These efforts have succeeded well, increasing our membership to 944 which is a net gain of 46.

I wish to publicly acknowledge on behalf of the association the receipt of $416.16 turned over to the treasurer by Mr. J. W. Hoopes, it being commissions received from fidelity and burglary insurance.

Des Moines, May 13.—Three bank meetings were held in Iowa this week. Group One met in Sioux City, Wednesday, Group Nine at Creston, Wednesday, and Group Five at Council Bluffs, Thursday. Programs for the meetings at Creston and Council Bluffs will be given next week. The program for Group One at Sioux City was as follows: Address of welcome, John McHugh, president of the Sioux City Clearing House Association. James Robertson, Jr., cashier of the Washta State at Washta, responded. C. A. Barr, cashier of the Des Moines National, Spoke on "Public Sentiment in Banking." W. V. Andrews, cashier of the Cherokee County State, of Meridan, spoke upon "Real Estate Loans as Bank Assets." Wilfred P. Jones of Algona, national bank examiner, spoke upon "Bankers and Bank Examinations." Ralph C. Wilson, assistant cashier of the Bankers National, Chicago, spoke upon "The Problem of the Country Bank Check."

At 4 o'clock the group laid away the sordid realities of life and adjourned to the base ball park where the Sioux City base ball team opened the Western League season in that city. At night the bankers were guests at the Orpheum theater. The guests were entertained at luncheon at the Mondamin at noon.

Supreme Court Decision

The supreme court handed down an opinion of interest to bankers when it held that the bank which makes a mistake in payment of a check may collect the overpayment from the payee. The Fidelity Savings of Marshalltown had paid John A. Reeder $1,385.22 when he drew out his entire account when there was due him but $1,285.22. The bank discovered the error and according to the testimony as submitted to the supreme court, Reeder, admitted that a mistake had been made. Later he denied and refused to repay the amount. The lower court returned a verdict for Reeder. The bank appealed and the supreme court has reversed the case. The court held specifically that the right to recover money paid by mistake is too well established to admit of any argument on the question.

Another supreme court decision will be of interest to bankers who deal more or less in tax sales and tax deeds. Phoebe A. Lucas of Marshall county was the widow of Edward A. Lucas whose property was sold at a tax sale some forty years ago. The tax sale deed is now in the hands of Annie L. Purdy. Upon the death of Lucas, the widow raised the point that inasmuch as she had not released the land and it had not been taken on execution, the sale was not a judicial one and hence she is entitled to claim her one-third dower. She won her point in the lower court but the supreme court reversed the case holding that the tax sale divested her of her inchoate dower interest.

Denied Parole

W. A. Ferran, the defaulting cashier of the Farmers State at Clearfield, was denied a parole by the Iowa board of parole at the conclusion of an interesting hearing. Ferran was convicted of fraudulent banking after he had been removed by B. F. Carroll, then state auditor, and it was found that he had been cutting leaves out of his books. Relatives repaid 95 cents on the dollar of his shortage and argued that he was entitled to a parole upon this showing. The board considered the case at length and recommended to the governor that Ferran serve a few years yet.

Change of Officers in Des Moines National

An important change took place in the Des Moines National when A. J. Zwart, who has been cashier for twenty years, was succeeded by Cyrus A. Barr, assistant cashier. Mr. Barr was formerly cashier of the Savings at Linder. President Arthur Reynolds was attracted by the young man's success in that field. He induced him to remove to Des Moines and his advancement is evidence that he has made good. Mr. Barr is one of the most popular bankers in the city. Mr. Zwart, who was cashier of the Polk County Savings until merged with the Des Moines National eighteen years ago, will continue with the Des Moines National. The latter is making phenomenal growth as its report of last week which showed an increase in deposits of $960,000 in the past year, demonstrates.

Bank Employees Receive Shock

To say that the employees of the First National at East Waterloo were shocked when a steam pop corn wagon standing in front of the building exploded, blowing out all the windows, will be putting it mildly. The owner of the pop corn stand turned cold water into a hot boiler and the steam exploded the gasoline tank. The accident happened at 6 in the evening when there were no patrons in the bank and no one was injured.

F. M. Hubbell Celebrates

F. M. Hubbell, the richest man in Iowa, celebrated last week the fifty-fourth anniversary of his arrival in the state. He started work in this city for Judge Phineas M. Casaday, now deceased, the pioneer banker of Des Moines. At that time, Mr. Hubbell received the salary of $100 per year. To-day he is worth several million, is president of the Equitable Life Insurance Co., of the Des Moines Union railway and is identified with the biggest financial ventures of which Iowa boasts. Mr. Hubbell recently observed his seventieth birthday and is hale and hearty.

Report of State Auditor

A study in finances is furnished by the report of the state auditor as to the complete cost of the recent Iowa legislature. The total expenditure is shown to have been $13,080.47. In return for this expenditure the people of Iowa received not more than a half dozen meritorious laws and the bankers of Iowa received not a single statute of importance. The salaries of the Iowa lawmakers were $88,550 all told.

Arbitrators Settle Dispute

W. T. Tisdale, a banker of Ottumwa, and L. T. Richmond, a banker of Albia, were two of the board of three arbitrators which has settled a wage dispute between Iowa mine operators and mine workers which might easily have resulted in a riot. The board was selected from men who were known to be fair, just and impartial and the terms recom-

IDAHO-OREGON LIGHT & POWER CO.

FIRST AND REFUNDING 6% GOLD BONDS

MATURING SERIALY, 1925 TO 1940

Principal and Semi-Annual Interest (April 1st and October 1st) Payable at the State Bank of Chicago. Denomination, $1,000

¶ The Idaho-Oregon Light & Power Company furnishes electric light and power to the cities of Boise, Emmett and Payette, Idaho. From these operations the net earnings for the year 1908 were $123,500. Present operations in these three cities, and earnings from new lighting and power contracts in territory now served by the Company's lines will produce net earnings for the year 1909 amounting to $180,000.

¶ At Ox Bow Bend, in the Snake River — 55 miles north of Huntington, Oregon — the Company is developing, with the money derived from the sale of the bonds now offered, a remarkable water power which will produce 21,000 salable horse-power, measured in Boise.

¶ Construction will be completed about April, 1910, and the entire plant will then be ready to operate. New business then available will double the gross earnings without much increase in operating expenses. Net earnings from present operations are sufficient to cover all fixed charges, including interest on the bonds issued for the Ox Bow Construction.

¶ The rapid growth of the surrounding territory, through the development of orchards and intensive farming in the Boise and Payette Valleys, insures an increasing market for this power.

¶ This bond issue constitutes a first mortgage lien on the hydro-electric development of 21,000 horse-power, valuable riparian rights, exclusive water rights, all property now owned or hereafter to be acquired by the Company, 120 miles of transmission lines in Idaho and Oregon, with sub-stations, franchises and distribution systems in the cities of Boise, Payette and Emmett, Idaho.

S. Casaday Returned from the East

Simon Casaday, president of the Central State of Des Moines, has returned from three weeks in the east where he conversed with financiers and looked into conditions generally. Leonard, Albert Davidson, I. Jones. Mr. Leonard will continue to make his home in Cedar Falls.

Set Moving Date

The Des Moines National has set June 1st as the date when it removes into its handsome new building at the corner of Sixth and Walnut streets, Des Moines. Texas Banking Conditions

I wish also to thank the officers and members of the association for the many courtesies extended to me during the year. They have thus added greatly to my pleasure in serving the association.

Legislation

Congress is grinding away at the revision of the tariff with an income tax measure thrown in as a sandwich. Our state legislature, by some dubbed, "The Great Political Convention," has been in almost continuous session since the first of the year. I have felt that our Legislative Committee was fully competent to look after any proposed legislation that might affect the interests of our members, and I have not presumed to interfere with or dictate to them in the matter which the association committed to their hands. This committee will make a report during the present session. In addition to this, there is to be a special address delivered by Mr. R. D. Gage, vice-president of the First National Bank, Ft. Worth, on the subject: "Legislation—Its Tendency and Effect upon the Development of the State." Since this phase of the work in which we are interested is to be so well handled it is not necessary that I should say more on the subject.

Recommendations and Suggestions

I would recommend that an efficient detective be employed on a salary for all his time and that the detective committee be authorized to offer such rewards as they may deem best to assist the detective in the apprehension and conviction of criminals who may depredate upon the members of the association. I hold this to be a matter of paramount importance.

I also wish to suggest some changes in the seven districts into which we have, for convenience, divided our work. I would suggest that the chairmen of the districts should be the vice-presidents of the association. And on account of their familiarity with the affairs of the association, that they, together with the other officers of the general body, constitute the Executive Committee; the duty of this committee to be to administer the affairs of the association in the interim of its annual sessions. I notice that our constitution makes no provision for proxy votes. The right to vote is a constitutional question therefore no proxy can rightfully vote in this association, as the constitution now stands. If it is the wish of the association that proxies be allowed to vote, the constitution should be so changed as to provide for the same. Whatever rulings may have been made in the past the fact exists that the constitution does not seem clear as to whether or not one person may represent more than one bank in the sessions of this association. I take it that we are all anxious to know just what the association wants on this question. It seems from these observations that the constitution is not sufficiently specific on all points; and that it does not meet all the demands of the association at the present time; hence I suggest that the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws take up the matter of a general revision of the constitution and by-laws and report as soon as possible to this session, to the end that the rules and regulations governing the association shall meet all legitimate demands of an up-to-date organization.

Another matter which I feel impressed to mention is one not at all new to any member of this association, and one upon which I would feel utterly incompetent to give advice even if this body needed instruction, and yet it is something that needs to be accentuated. I mention it not because the members do not know but because they do, and I am therefore sure that I shall have their hearty endorsement of what I shall say. It is this: The bankers are, in a very true sense of the term, the trustees of the people's money. The money placed with us on deposit is literally a sacred trust fund. And the spirit if not always the precise letter of the laws concerning trust funds is absolutely binding upon us. The man of large means places his capital in our hands, goes his way to New York or other eastern marts, makes large investments, and with perfect confidence in us gives a simple check in payment. The homeseeker goes west, is charmed with the rich undulating prairies and splendid farm lands. He buys into the thousands of dollars' worth, and places in the hands of the vendor a small strip of paper which is accepted as payment in full. Every single phase of this transaction is based upon faith in the banker. The day laborer, after a week's hard toil, places his small earnings in our hands; he goes home to his family and, with a broad smile, shows his wife his pass book bearing evidence that the wages of one more week have been laid aside for the hour of emergency. Gentlemen, think of the responsibilities which the confidence of our neighbors places upon us. Let this be our admonition to avoid all speculation and wildcat schemes of outside investments, and let us ever stick to our worthy and honored vocation.

Another suggestion I make by way of emphasis, is that the right sort of a banker will interest himself in everything that makes for the educational, social and moral advancement of the community. It is his pleasure to respond, and that in a liberal way, to all proper calls in the interest of colleges, sanitariums, public libraries and such like. I am glad to state that the good all around banker looks at these matters not as a mere policy affair nor so-called charity, but with genuine heart-interest; and while we are not here to brag on ourselves or to sound the trumpet to call attention to the little that we may do, yet it is a fact which I believe worthy of mention, that wherever you see, in the state of Texas, a college building, a public hospital, a library, a Y. M. C. A. building or church house you

Banking Conditions in Virginia

Members of the Virginia Bankers Association:

As I was not present at the last annual convention of your association at Hot Springs this is the first opportunity that I have had of thanking you for the compliment paid me in

The interest of the members in the work of the association continually increases as they realize more and more the many advantages which are derived from association and co-operation, and I confidently expect that on account of the many important subjects which will be considered the attendance on the 16th annual convention will exceed that of any previous one.

I would say that our association has made decided progress during the past year; its officers, executive council, attorney, various standing and special committees and members working in harmony to attain the high ends for which it was conceived, and I commend them all for their efficiency, zeal, and fidelity.

I cannot forbear to mention the great pleasure and profit I derived from my attendance on a meeting of Group Two, to which the chairman kindly invited me. The attendance was good and the keenest interest manifested. The addresses, which were made by members of the group, were of a high order and both instructive and entertaining. What impressed me most was that we had among our membership so many who are qualified to speak on any of the subjects pertaining to banking, and the group meetings are bringing out latent talent which will prove of great service to the association in the future. I was also invited to attend a meeting of Group Four, but regret that other engagements prevented my doing so.

Owing to the removal from the state of W. P. Venable a vacancy occurred in the chairmanship of Group Four and I appointed E. P. Miller of Lynchburg to the position.

The executive council will recommend several changes in the constitution, the most important of which are: First, to admit Virginia chapters of the American Institute of Banking to membership in the association; and second, providing for five vice-presidents instead of nine as at present, one chosen from each of the groups composing the association, who shall be the chairman of their respective groups.

electing me president. Never having considered myself in connection with this office your selection of me was a total surprise and causes me to appreciate all the more highly this expression of your esteem and confidence. The custom which formerly obtained of having an address of welcome has been abandoned and now this devolves upon the president in addition to his other duties.

I welcome you all, members of the association, visitors, ladies, and gentlemen, to this lovely spot which nature and art have done so much to beautify, to these balmy breezes which blow fresh from the ocean, to this magnificent scene of water and headland spread out to your view, to the sea food which will delight your palates, and furnish phosphorus to your tired brains, earnestly hoping that amid such surroundings of beauty and comfort you may forget the cares and responsibilities of your daily lives and return to your posts of duty refreshed in mind, body, and spirit.

I am informed by our secretary, Mr. Gatling, that he has effected a lease of the Chamberlin Hotel to the Virginia Bankers Association, and their guests for three days; therefore you can go where you wish, do what you will, call for what you want and if any one interferes with our personal liberty report them to Mr. Gatling.

The membership of the association has reached its high water mark and more banks have been admitted to membership during the year than in any previous year in its history; the number admitted being 24, bringing the total membership to 307 of the 335 banks and banking firms doing business in Virginia; and if energy, persistency, and tact will avail anything our secretary will have them all enrolled in a short time.

The group system, which was inaugurated two years ago is just beginning to manifest its usefulness. While this system has been in operation in some of the states for several years it was new to us and has required several meetings to demonstrate its capabilities.

I will not attempt to anticipate the chairmen of the various groups, each one of whom will doubtless make a report to the association, but

Since we last met there has been a gradual improvement in business conditions but it has not been as great as we had hoped or desired. The impression is general that the liquidation

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

J. H. INGWERSEN, secretary of the Council Club which got under way at Denver, has been attending the Texas, Louisiana and other Southern conventions, and reports the exes as enthusiastic everywhere. The new club printing is ready and members will be kept posted upon developments.

M. A. GRAETTINGER, secretary for Wisconsin, was in Chicago on Saturday last "looking up speakers" for his big convention, June 26-27-28. They will have choice to speak at a shore meeting or on the boat.

W. T. FENTON has given out a very bullish interview on the general business situation, just a little bit too rosy for the average man. Mr. Fenton has that very happy disposition, however.

GROUP EIGHT, Illinois, will meet at Beardstown, May 26th. This is the group of which E. E. Crabtree is chairman and F. W. Crane secretary. A fine program has been arranged.

IT had to come. Elmer Dover, assistant secretary to the national republican committee is to be a national bank examiner at New York where the regular and special compensation is $12,000 per year. By way of preparation for the place he has held political small jobs for the past 12 years.

IT'S down on the roster as James P., but to his friends in Missouri the new president of the Missouri Bankers is plain "Jim" Hinton. At Hannibal, where he lives, he's even more popular than "at large," which isn't always to be said of those whose business in life is the making and collecting of loans.

BESIDES being president of the Hannibal National, Mr. Hinton heads the Commercial Club, is president of the Board of Public Works, and of the electric light plant. Then to fill in the time he is president of an ice and coal company, of the Humane Society, and acts as treasurer of the telephone company and of the park commission.

TWELVE years ago Mr. Hinton organized a Sunday-school class in the Fifth Street

Baptist Church composed of boys from 8 to 12 years old and to-day every one of these young men occupy positions in the commercial world secured largely by the assistance of their teacher. The annual camp of this class for the past twelve years has been the envy of every boy in the city. During the world's fair in St. Louis Mr. Hinton took his entire class down and they camped near one of the gates for a week.

M. R. HINTON hunts and fishes for a time every year and acts as director in nearly every insurance and utility company in his part of the state. It was he, as state treasurer of the association, that helped to round up "every bank and trust company" in the state to join the association. He's been a mighty busy, useful man in his sphere which ever is widening.

S. B. RANKIN is having no end of a time trying to convince his bankers that they ought not to cash checks for strangers. The "stranger" in the case has been opening a collection account on distant points, making a large deposit of checks, and incidentally cashing a small one. Same old story. Too anxious to do business.

TWO or three of the best men in the country now are "detached" and it ought not to be for long. There's E. O. Eldredge, the clever secretary of the New York State Bankers Association, and Charles L. Farrell, for instance. It would be fortunate for any bank to have such men. Mr. Eldredge has been abroad and Mr. Farrell has been on a vacation, and for the time, is in Chicago.

THE Louisiana tri-state convention wasn't a howling success in the way of attendance. A promised "good time" will not draw the practical banker. The Texans did not go over as was expected and the Alabama and Mississippi bankers are not travelers. It takes a high class speaking program by men they wish to hear to draw bankers. Automobile and boat rides do not draw.

J. W. HOOPES, secretary for Texas, who got up the big Houston convention and beat all records, is an Iowa man. "I might have known he was an Iowan by his way of doing things," said J. H. Ingwersen on his return from the South, "but I didn't." Mr. Hoopes is proud of his native state and doesn't forget to look up any bankers from there who may stray into the Lone Star territory.

W. H. HURLEY had the time of his life at the Houston convention. Before coming to the National Bank of the Republic in Chicago, he was with the Merchants National at Houston. Shaking hands was a continuous performance.

A PRIVATE telegram from New York announces the retirement of Vice-President A. L. Bannister from the staff of the Mutual Alliance Trust Co.

THE Brule National, capital $25,000, located at Brule, S. D., now is two years old and the deposits are hovering around the three hundred thousand dollar notch. Pretty good going.

C. A. BARR has succeeded A. J. Zwart as cashier of the Des Moines National. Mr. Barr came from the savings bank at Linden, Iowa, where he attracted the attention of President Arthur Reynolds. Mr. Zwart, who retired, has been the cashier for twenty years.

THIS is what a keen observer says about Mr. Barr: "Mr. Barr is a young man of most engaging personality, a keen financier and solidly grounded in the essentials of successful banking. In personal appearance and demeanor he is clean and wholesome, endowed with a genial and happy disposition which creates a favorable impression at first sight."

CERTAINLY not! The American Bankers Association is not fighting the traveler's cheques put out by one of its own members, Knauth, Nachod & Kühne of New York, nor is it fighting the many banks which sell their own. It is only after the express companies and you can be a good, loyal A. B. A. man and do business with the reliable, experienced K. N. & K.

Latest on Postal Bank Situation

In talking with you for a while in reference to the subject of postal savings banks, it is not my intention to debate the question. I am entirely satisfied that you are aware of the folly of such a scheme. My thought is, however, to review the question, analyzing it as best we may, so that it may be clear in our own minds and that we may be better able to discuss it with our directors, stockholders and customers; for a part of the responsibility of the American banker now lies in the matter of carrying on a sensible campaign of education in reference to the financial problem.

While there is no one who can honestly deny that the establishment of postal savings banks will injure existing banks, I do not suggest that we approach the subject from this seemingly selfish angle, but since we are the trained financial men of the country, it is our definite duty to study the problems and advise the people as to the desirability or undesirability of various financial schemes.

During the last few years there has been a general tendency in this country to emphasize the federal government and emphasize and extend its spheres of operation. Much that has been done by the federal government has been of a sufficiently spectacular nature that many people have been led to forget the constitutional form of our government and have lost sight of the functions of the state governments. Seemingly, many people have forgotten that the millenium cannot be reached by legislation of any nature, but that all progress of value is made along carefully considered paths of evolutionary process.

Now, I do not feel competent to pass judgment upon all this, but I do feel very keenly that much of this action is a far departure from the original intentions of the men who founded our federal government. Further than that, history teaches that those governments are the best which are the closest to the people and in which the people themselves have the most part; and no calamity, in my opinion, could be greater than that the people of this country generally should come to ignore the city, county and state governments and look to the government at Washington as the only authority.

Another thing which must always be true is that individuals grow only as they have responsibilities and work put upon them, and it is a sign of weakness when people turn to a government to do things which they themselves should do. You well know that one of the chief reasons why the American people have made such rapid progress in all lines of development is because of the fact that our entire governmental system was founded on the theory of independence of action, which meant that every man should have an opportunity to develop into the most successful and useful position, so long as he did so without interfering with the rights of others.

It seems clear that the thought was that the government should regulate business rather than operate it. When the time comes that a majority of the American people turn to the federal government to carry on the business activities of our country, it will be a sure sign that we are either incompetent or too lazy to continue the splendid work which we as individuals have done in the past, and should that time come, I am absolutely sure it will indicate the decline of our magnificent commonwealth.

I am approaching our subject of to-day with these general statements, because I believe that in the proposition for the establishment of postal savings banks there are elements of danger and indications of tendencies of far greater import than is apparent at first glance; although, it is well for us not to lose sight of the fact that in the scheme it is proposed that the government shall go into the banking business on an enormous scale in competition with citizens of the country, who, for a century, have been among the most active in the development of our country, and have probably had the most to do with its material progress.

The advocates of the postal savings bank argue—first, that a postal savings bank, being a government institution, would attract foreigners who have been accustomed to government saving institutions abroad, and knowing nothing of our institutions, will become more thrifty citizens if provided with the system in America. They claim that the postal savings bank would attract many American citizens, too, who through ignorance or some unfortunate experience have no confidence in our banking institutions, and who will be led to make use of government depositaries.

Second—It is claimed that in many parts of the United States banking facilities are not adequate for the needs of the people, and that the postal savings bank will furnish banking service to vast numbers who live at a distance from the larger towns, and who are deprived of banking service owing to this fact. There being more post offices than banks, it is argued that these people will be better served.

The altogether desirable results to be obtained are that it will make our people more thrifty and will bring from hiding a very considerable amount of currency that is not now in circulation.

While granting the force of these arguments, let us examine carefully into the situation to learn—

First—Whether the need is as great as is claimed.

Second—Whether, even granting a need, the benefits obtained would be as great as the injury done.

Third—Whether our present banking system is developing and whether it contains possibilities of development and regulation so that the needs will be met as the country grows.

In meeting the first point, I think one can say at the outset that the erroneous figures circulated quite generally from Washington, in advocating the passage of a postal savings bank bill, have been so misleading that many people have an exaggerated idea of the need for postal savings banks. Former Postmaster-General von Meyer, in his various statements on the subject, took the statistics compiled in reference to the mutual savings banks of the East as a basis for representing the need for the postal savings bank. Now, no greater mistake than this could possibly have been made. For, while it is true that a very considerable part of the savings business in the East is done with exclusive savings banks, such business is not all done with mutual banks even in those states. For instance, the banking department of the state of Pennsylvania advises us that there are $200,000,000 of savings in the state of Pennsylvania outside of the mutual savings banks. Going south and west and into the newer sections of the country, we find that most of the savings business is not done with the mutual savings banks, but with various capitalized state institutions and with national banks. Thus it is that while the statistics which I have already quoted show that there is a total of $3,600,000,000 of savings deposits in the United States, in the twenty-two states reported in Senate Document No. 544, which is a report of a hearing given to Ex-Postmaster-General von Meyer by the senate committee, we find after correspondence with different state banking departments, that there are fully 15,000 banks that accept savings deposits in one form or another and that these banks hold in excess of $6,000,000,000 of savings deposits.

A brief explanation of these additional figures would be interesting to you. Senate Document No. 544 would lead one to believe that there are no savings deposits of any character in the state of Michigan; whereas, we find that there are 351 state banks with savings of $137,811,000 on deposit, and there are in the same state seventy-five national banks with $25,415,204. The same document would give you to understand that in 1907 there were three banks in the state of Ohio accepting savings deposits—these with $64,463,000—whereas, in a letter from the department of banking in that state, dated February 22, 1909, we are advised that the total savings deposits of the state banks and trust companies is $190,282,274. There are also in the state of Ohio 118 national banks with $20,700,682 savings deposits.

According to this report, there are no banks in your own state of Mississippi accepting savings deposits. You are much better able to say how much mistaken that report is than I, but I do know that according to your banking commissioner's report you have $3,753,730 of strictly savings deposits in state banks. I also know that there are several national banks with savings departments; but most of all, as you well know, the large totals shown in your statements as "Time Certificates of Deposit" are equivalent to savings deposits, and while the system in many of the smaller towns does not include the issuing of pass books, the savings bank service is given through the certificates of deposit mentioned.

I could furnish additional figures that would further show the inaccuracy of the statistics that have been furnished, but you have enough to illustrate my point. I shall simply add the figures which we have secured from other states in the South and West, where it is claimed there are no savings facilities. These reports are all from the state banking officials, and do not include savings which are in national banks and which amount to a considerable item in all the states mentioned:

IN 1810 when this bank was founded, Conestoga Wagons were used for conveying families and their household goods from one point to another; the first railroad was not built until 1830.

It is now 99 years since The Bank of Pittsburgh was founded, and it has been in continuous existence ever since, uninterrupted by the violent financial disturbances of the past century, and constantly increasing its resources and ability to serve its patrons. It desires to extend its collection facilities and its business with other banks and invites correspondence.

Thus it would seem that the "lack of facilities" argument is not so strong as has been claimed. We will consider the question as to whether these facilities are increasing a little later on.

In comparing the benefits and disadvantages, one may say at once that that banking system is the best which handles the funds of a community in such a manner that the community is most benefited. A point which it is important for you to keep in mind all through this discussion is that a very large part of the country is in early stages of development; that while to a very definite extent the eastern part of our country has been developed, in a considerable part of the West this process is just beginning. Banking requirements, therefore, are different. The harm likely to result from the establishing of postal savings banks in such communities is very clear to any one familiar with the development of this western territory. With the exception of the railroad nothing has had more to do with the development of this territory than banks; and this condition, which is so general in all western territory, is equally true of a large percentage of our southern territory.

A small bank established in a new community is the means of bringing in outside capital at the start and of carefully conserving such local capital as may develop. The reserve money of the saving farm hand and of the more prosperous farmer is taken by the bank and turned back into activity in the community by being loaned on first mortgage security, perhaps to some farm employee who is starting for himself and purchasing a farm, or some of the money may be loaned to a newcomer, who has bought a farm, to assist him in buying implements and animals for the development of his farm. After a time when these citizens have been built up to days of prosperity, they in turn become lenders of capital, through the local bank, which, in turn, will loan the money to home builders in the town, or to farmers or manufacturers as the community develops. This work can never be done by the postal savings bank. Even its most ardent friends would not claim this for it, and yet they would create this system which would handicap present small banks in new communities and without question defer for indefinite periods the establishment of new banks where needed.

Turning our attention briefly to our final point, as to whether our banking system is developing, one need but review the history of the last ten years in which the number of banking institutions in the United States has increased so very rapidly. During that period the National Bank Act has been so adjusted that new national banks with capitals of $25,000 each may be established, and many hundreds of these institutions have been organized, and are still being organized in the newer communities.

I think one of the best illustrations of this is reported in a letter which I received from the banking commissioner of the state of North Dakota. The letter bears so definitely upon several features of this question that I will read all of it to you.

Office of State Examiner, State of North Dakota.

Bismarck, January 19, 1909.

Mr. Lucius Teter, President Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:—I have your letter of January 15th, in which you ask for some information relative to the banks in North Dakota, and beg to advise you as follows:

(1) The total number of state and national banks reported on November 27th, was 571.

(2) Number of state banks reported, 439.

(3) In 1898 there were 81 state banks, and from the only reports we have in this office, I find in 1896 29 national banks.

(4) The deposits in the state banks in this state on November 27, 1908, that I would class as savings deposits, aggregated $11,875,114.65; as to national banks, I cannot give the exact figures, as in the comptroller's statement they are only classed as individual deposits, but according to the way they run in our reports from the state banks, I think $10,000,000 would be a conservative estimate.

(5) Pursuant to the call of November 27, 1908, the aggregate deposits in state and national banks aggregated $58,720,947.90.

(6) My opinion as to the effect of a postal savings bank law on banks in North Dakota is that I think it would be very detrimental, as in this, a new and growing state, I believe that the development of the country has been largely due to the presence of the banks. The money used by these banks in many cases was imported into the state on time certificates, etc., and as at all times the demand for loans is good, any law that would draw the money from the smaller places to commercial centers would be detrimental to the general welfare of the state.

Yours truly,

Oliver Knudson, State Examiner

By R. A. Nelson.

Now, if you will refer again to the statistics shown in Senate Calendar 544, which I quoted a moment ago, we learn that the total savings deposits in the banks in the twenty-two states which are reported have increased from $1,623,079,748 in 1892 to $3,690,000,000 in 1907. While neither of these figures show the total of savings deposits in the United States, they serve for comparison, and the comparison certainly does not look as though the people have lost confidence in present banks.

It would doubtless be of interest to you for me to say that according to the comptroller's report there are 2,011 national banks in the United States, carrying $331,000,000 of savings deposits, and none of these figures include the vast amount of money that is held by banks throughout the country on certificates of deposit, which as you know, are practically savings deposits, particularly in the smaller towns. As you well know, banks have been becoming more numerous and much safer each year, and no true friend of our present American bankers could favor an enactment which is bound to be interpreted throughout the country as a government condemnation of our existing banking institutions.

There are numerous other points that can be made, showing the undesirable features of the proposed postal savings legislation, but I have already taken far too much of your time.

There were a number of postal savings bank bills before the last congress. The Senate Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads recommended for passage a bill introduced by Senator Carter of Montana. The present special session of congress is not likely to consider any postal savings bank bills, but, as you know, the present administration is favoring a postal savings bank law. So, while I do not think any one can say just when this question is likely to come up again, there are undoubtedly numerous people urging that a bill be passed. Therefore, it is of great importance that we should give the subject careful attention. The conservative thing, it would seem to me, would be that the subject should be referred to the Monetary Commission which congress has appointed to consider the entire problem of the government in its relation to financial matters; for, after all is said and done, this question is a financial question and not a postal department question, and whatever is done in it should become a part of the general plan worked out by the eminent gentlemen composing the Monetary Commission.

Gentlemen, let no man feel in leaving here to-day that this is not his affair and he need not worry about it. It is your affair. As American bankers one of our first duties is to see that no unsound or unwise steps be taken by the government in financial matters. Whether we are interested in savings banks or not—we must be united in our opposition to a measure so opposed in every way to the theory of our federal government.

Let no man go home feeling that the responsibilities I have indicated to-day belong to some one else and that a committee will succeed in defeating this legislation, and that some one who has less to do than you is going to do your share of the work in bringing people to a better understanding of the business of banking. There is much for us all to do, collectively and individually. Having once convinced the people that we can be trusted to work out these problems for them, we must keep diligently at the task of perfecting our banking system. Go home resolved to spend a day next week explaining to your directors and other business men in your community, the error of the postal savings bank plan. You will find that these men can quickly grasp the point, that government competition means just so much less money for your community. Ask these men to write to their congressmen, telling them that they do not want a postal savings bank law passed. If you will do this, and every banker will do it, there will be no postal savings bank law. Nor does our responsibility end here. We must see to it that our state and federal statutes are made so that our banks can gradually evolve into more and more ideal institutions, profitable and satisfactory alike to the customers and to the owners.

Group Six, Illinois

Paris, Ill., May 11.—The third annual meeting of Group Six of the Illinois Bankers Association was held here to-day, about seventy-five members and visitors being in attendance. The principal address was delivered by John L. Hamilton of Hoopeston, a member of the legislative commission of the national association, who voiced a protest against the central bank idea and postal savings banks. He favored an elastic credit currency, with all banks sharing in the privilege of issue. Oscar G. Foreman of Chicago discussed certain phases of modern banking which have tended to eliminate many prejudices of long standing and predicted further progress in this direction. R. L. Rinaman discussed bonding of employees, time-lock supervision and burglar insurance. The new officers chosen are:

President—B. F. Harris, Champaign.

Vice-president—John J. Hamilton, Hoopeston.

Secretary-treasurer—S. Y. Whitlock, Tuscola.

Character by Legislation

A notable paper read at the Tri-State convention at New Orleans, by C. A. Johnston of Columbus, Mississippi

When invited to come to New Orleans for this occasion, we were told we would be met by a committee. I was assured that I would be in the hands of my friends. True to promise I fell into the care of two gentlemen, it proved of "the cloth;" one in blue, the other in black. The one an officer to guide, direct, prevent any violation of the ethics, as they prevail in New Orleans. The one in black a spiritual adviser, to show me the way, and tell me the things I should do. Serene in such company, I naturally relaxed slightly my Mississippi tension and asked to have Sazerac's pointed out. The man in blue said he did not know, but that he could find a way. Thereupon he got out his map, made some 300 foot measurements, and said, "Follow me." We started at a black spot on the map, representing a church, walked around the block, and landed across the street in front of the point of beginning. Now, says he, we are within our legal rights and this is Sazerac's. That is the way you do it now.

It seems a gentleman in your legislature, with an ambition to attach his name to a statute, got up and passed a 300-foot rule making it unlawful to quench a thirst within that distance of a church or school.

There having been no very great clamor for such legislation, even the performers were taken off their feet, and eyeing it askance they asked him to interpret it. Pulling himself up to his fullest stature, throwing his coat-tails over his shoulder, taking on a semblance of great Richelieu, he swung his arms in a 300-foot concentric, and exclaimed, "This is the sacred circle of the church into which the Demon rum shall not enter."

Again—a few months later when New Orleans woke up and found her beauty all marred with these concentrics, the convenience of her early risers very much interrupted, the Progressive Union got together and demanded of the author of the bill an interpretation of its terms. This time he said he could measure the 300 feet by any route, just so you didn't put any old-timer out of business. It is very gratifying to learn that your courts have taken the same view of a very interesting situation. It is like it used to be with your sweetheart. Going to meet her you took the air line route, taking her back the longest way around was the nearest way home.

This law it so happened was protecting a church that had never asked it, never cared for it and best of all, was able to protect itself, and as a church had never taken any active part in any of our reform legislation. Indeed that church had been through some reformations of its own, and had profited thereby. Now in contrast comes a cable from China that the devout Chinese are raising Cain because forsooth a Methodist preacher was trying to buy ground and erect a church within 300 feet of the tomb of Confucius. So there you are, a liquor saloon in America is bad company for a church, while in Great China that same church is too disreputable to be in sight of a graveyard. The Moslems who are slaughtering the Christian Armenians believe they are doing God's work, so that at last we are all proselyters, and orthodoxy the unsolved problem.

Light is breaking in the East. I am told the revolution in Turkey gave prohibition a jolt, loosened a screw in the creed of the Prophet, and that ex-beer jerkers of America are on the jump to set up bar rooms on the banks of the Bosphorus.

Under the operation of your church law, I was told, the president of the staid old Boston club and he, too, of the Pickwick, had been arraigned for bootlegging.

Ah, how time and legislation change the customs and thoughts of people! New Orleans was first discovered by Captain Lafitte, who made the port of entry for his piratical craft, the good ship, so well sailed and so well named—the Sata. This was his refuge and safe harbor for his crew and plunder. He joined Old Hickory in its defense, and you search in vain for a monument to his memory, for the relationship is disavowed.

Later the Louisiana lottery made this its home and New Orleans became the depository of the floating speculative capital of the continent. And I want to say that I know scores of prosperous business men who got their start, the stake from the Louisiana lottery. I know of freed farms and happy homes where abide contentment and plenty put there from the same source. I have never seen a man or family hurt financially, morally, or otherwise. It may have had its sins, but I cannot recall a single benefaction, or philanthropist that can equal its record of good.

This accumulation here of capital soon made the city rich and bad. Then the old aristocracy formed a jockey club, built a race track, and made it the finest strains of America's finest horse contested. There are those yet who thrill at the compte. Thousands in the later days grew mad over the lightning speed of McChesney.

Betting was to many an auxiliary to the sport as wine is to a banquet. Neither did it lead thieving any more than dinner drinking to drunkenness. Pacing, too, brought other thousands of good, bad, and indifferent, all depositors and spenders of money. The city got gayer, badder, if you please; it came to be the winter home of the idle rich, indeed, the Paris of America. There were no walls, no gates, handing the keys to Rex was a perfunctory formality, for the city was—wide open.

So much wealth, so much prosperity, so much human happiness could but excite envy in the hearts of those whose only business is to regulate the affairs of others. This culminated when seventeen preachers each of a kind, each feeling that his business had been hurt, formed a clearing house, pooled their grievances and issued a propaganda at Shreveport to the legislature at Baton Rouge. With characteristic immoderate modesty, they made only five demands. First, miscegenation must cease; speculation in cotton futures must stop; race horse betting must not be; state wide prohibition should prevail, and, "in conclusion," as they were wont to say in their pulpits, they added a little joker. There should be no Sunday amusements where a fee of admission was charged.

During the discussion of these demands and the several bills in pursuance thereof, when all affected interests were kicking, some desperate one remembered that in union there is strength, and thereupon a holy alliance was formed by a trinity in travail, and a Jonah was elected. They put out race horse betting, traded prohibition for a 300-foot rule, and in the scramble gave the cotton exchange such a scare that it seemed there could never be a bull campaign in cotton again with a New Orleans man for its leader. When the legislature caught its wind, it turned to the business of the people, and let the Sunday paid amusements alone. To stop them was the joker in the scheme, the real object of the crusade, and to let them alone was the only joke in the whole serious business. The preachers had demanded bread, and the legislature gave them a stone.

I have been told the reformation will not hurt New Orleans, that her growth and prosperity are assured. People are here, and still they come. But they must be amused, and what are they doing? Instead of the dope sheet in the papers, columns of technique of the noble art of self-defense confront the student of current events describing how Buck Flanagan fought Billy O'Dare 60 rounds to a finish, and whipped him to a standstill. True, Buck came out with his nose awry, both eyes shut, and not many teeth, but the contest netted $30,000 to the promoters, and the betting was two to one. Racing has been exchanged perforce for athletics, admiration shifted from the thoroughbred to the brute. I do not speak French, so permit me to go back to my Latin—"De gustibus non est disputandum."

The South has not had a President of our country in half a century, nor a representative abroad since the days of Cleveland, but she has the biggest and the most brutal slugger who wears the belt as champion of the world, and no man, white or black, dare stand up before nigger Johnson.

People will be amused. Legislate one form out, and another takes its place, and generally on a lower plane. When the Sunday amusement bill gets through, you must abandon opera and turn to the wall the pictures of Patti, Nielson, and Constantino, and in its stead the Salvation Army will beat its bazoo on the neutral ground by day, and desecrate the hallowed auditorium of the French Opera House at night.

In Mississippi legislation has covered every possible phase of human action. Our code reads like the front part of the Bible, where legislative conceit was exhausted meeting the ingenuity of God's favored people.

One cannot bet, speculate, intoxicate, or stay out late. No child may labor, and to their glory be it said the men will not. Only our women and negroes work. Trade, transportation, corporations, every solid interest is overseen by a commission. The home has been invaded, mother's jurisdiction over her own flesh and blood has been taken away, father's control of his boy or his girl has been removed, and foster parents provided by law from among those who never felt a mother's love, or bore a father's responsibility. Now we are sitting up late in the enforcement of the laws. Especially are we interested in the art of "collecting back taxes." All property, persons, or corporations that might, could, would—no matter about should—are assessed and reassessed. Old tax receipts that used to pass one to the polls are in disrepute and no longer respected. The exhilarating sport of shooting niggers now almost palls because of the pursuit of the blind tiger. Under the new excitement many of our public men, leaders in politics, military, and ministry, many old-time leader in drinking bouts too, have gone into law enforcement leagues, and there's a spy in every family, a detective in every shadow. Old ties of friendship are broken and no barrier can estop these rough riders in their mad chase. In their speeches they brand the people as wicked and too lawless to live. The press is our only hope that it will not publish to the world just how bad we are. And yet, 1,600 of our citizens are in the penitentiary, and as many more summering on our county farms. Statistics are lies when not useful. But I venture to quote from the same compiler and tell you that only seven per cent of these jail-birds would confess to a penchant for liquor.

I met an old negro here from Mississippi. I have always thought that when you find a Mississippian out of the state there must be a reason. So I asked him why? "Well, boss, when all dem governors, old ladies, and old drinkers jined that 'low down league' just to keep folks from drinking, I got spicious of ma nigger preacher, and I got so dry I had to leave." "Well, how do you find it in New Orleans?" "Ah, sir, this place is all right. Jest keep away from the churches an' dem bucket-shops—den dere's plenty of licker."

In Mississippi, according to public appearances, we have passed in beyond the sinful stage; we are in a spasm of sanctification, and fast approaching the beatitudes. Our "law enforcing leagues" are so enthusiastic in the pursuit of one set of offenders that they have overlooked crimes like murder, theft, and perjury. In their zeal they have made crap-shooting by negroes a penitentiary offense, and having a taste for liquor the unpardonable sin. Our governor went visiting in the wrong direction doing constable duty. He has all the ex-governors, save one, and God grant him health, as his deputies, and it has to come to pass that not one of them will admit in public that he ever met the governor of North Carolina in private. We all wear halos over our heads of our own furnishing. At that we shall observe the proprieties. We have provided a silver service for the finest battleship afloat which bears our name, and will keep untarnished our fame amid every scene of war. She will have the biggest punch bowl in the American navy, and we have the assurance of Father Time that he will halt the spheres, that the angels may witness its proper christening.

I spent a part of last summer at Saratoga. It is called a village, but it has the biggest and best hotels of the cities. In the old days it was the summer resort of the wealth and beauty of the South, especially New Orleans. People went there for the rarity of the air, the exhilaration of the effervescing waters, and a little moral relaxation. Last season was a failure. An enormous falling away in the attendance. The well borers had nearly ruined the springs in their greed to make more springs, the little politicians of the legislature under the drive of the preachers and reformers had ruined racing and the speculative feature of the place. Late in August they held a meeting to organize a personal liberty league. I never saw a more demonstrative audience. So-called reform had touched the pockets of these people, and they were terribly in earnest. The speakers sowed seed on fertile ground, and the harvest has come. They have elected a democratic government, who in turn have proclaimed Saratoga once more an "open port."

Our legislators are too timid, too mercurial. They let a league of idle men and women, who have organized and who work for a certain line of legislation, make them believe that they are the people. Having nothing else to do they hang around capitol, lobbying all the time, while the public, a great, unorganized militia is being legislated into slavery. The Maker of the universe.

when it came to handing out laws to man, only called one of us into consultation, and the whole code had only six laws. These six have lasted through all the ages, never been recalled or amended.

We have too many laws. We are too emotional. We take up a fad in a night and enact it into a law in a day, so that our courts are working overtime construing these bungling experimentations instead of working out old principles. We have had a Congress in session every year since 1790, and yet last session there was presented over 12,000 bills, and Speaker Cannon deserves, in my opinion, the everlasting thanks of our country for preventing their consideration. Our legislatures are perennial, and every member from the swamps to the hill tops wants to pass a bill with his name tagged to it for identification.

It would be a blessing if, for the next twenty years Congress were limited to raising revenue, expending it, and repealing laws. There could be no greater blessing to your and my state were our legislatures so limited for the century. Men will bet, will speculate, will drink. It's innate, it's human. It's the virility, the grit, the dare that makes the man. All the laws conceivable cannot stop him. It is within the power of Omnipotence alone, and His remedy is death.

Those of you who have boys to raise—vaccinate them with the virus of two of God's commandments—Thou shalt not lie, and Thou shalt not steal. Let us exemplify them in our lives, and mother will do the rest. The men who tramped from Nashville to Chalmette, never heard of an excise law. The men who went out of old New Orleans, who were taught manhood, honor, self-restraint, and self-reliance by mother, and who saw it exemplified by father, these were they who manned the guns of the immortal Washington Artillery on the red field of Manassas.

Oklahoma Bankers Convention at Enid

Enid, Okla., May 20.—The feature of the first day's meeting of the Oklahoma Bankers Association, which met here yesterday for a two days' convention, easily was the eloquent address of welcome to Enid, by Edmund Frantz. The state bankers section had met the day before with a good attendance. Mr. Frantz said in part:

I am sure I voice the sentiments of all the good people of this city, when I say you are welcome.

I realize that in a welcoming address, mere words count for but little, you hear them at every bankers convention; but here in Enid this time, we are going to back up our words with courtesies and such appropriate receptions and attentions that you will know you have not only been to a bankers convention, but that you have been to Enid, the newest and the best, the most thrifty and the most substantial young city in Oklahoma.

We are easily the largest city of our age in the state, if not in the entire country. We are just entering that delightful period of our municipal life, when all is sunshine above us and the flowers of promise are blooming beneath our feet.

We are burdened by no cares not necessary to our growth and are conscious of no joys but those that light our path. In fact we are just beginning to be sweet sixteen and everything and everybody, bankers and all, look good to us. Enid is the railway center of Oklahoma. We have claimed this distinction for nearly seven years. We do not claim it any longer. We just assert it as an indisputable fact and nobody familiar with the truth, disputes it.

The next time you pick up an Oklahoma map, find Enid, draw a circle around it and you have a wheel with ten spokes in it, each spoke representing a rail road. Ten in all, in and out, and two others knocking at our doors. If all this has been done in fifteen years, what can we not accomplish in the years to come?

We claim another distinction. We are the smallest city in the United States having ten rail roads. This means that we will grow and growing will be a source of profit to every investor who has faith in our future.

We have over fifty miles of railway trackage within our city limits and the yards still cramped for room. Thirty-two mail trains daily pass a given point and adding to these the regular and special freights and cars on sidings here, over ten miles of rolling stock each day can be seen.

And in addition to all these elements of strength and evidences of healthy growth, we have just completed the largest live stock sales pavilion in the world. At our first meeting, train loads of registered thoroughbreds, some of them coming a thousand miles were on exhibition to the delight and profit of our progressive farmers who attended the show in automobiles, and I may parenthetically add that one of them could have come in his own flying machine.

Enid is the heart and center of the finest farming section in the state. Blooming alfalfa fields freight the air with the perfume of flowers, waving grains like undulating billows grace the landscape and our overhanging sky more beautiful than Italy's mirrors this region of happy homes, homes resonant with the sweet voices of happy children and graced by the matronly dignity of the prettiest women in the world.

But I have not the time and you have not the patience to hear me tell of the thousand other advantages that Enid possesses and that will make her grow, and finally, as I believe, become the metropolis of all this vast area.

Some of the large life insurance companies take millions from us in premiums and by their charters are prevented from loaning or investing in the west. Why should we not have a law like some other states have, a law which compels the investment in the state of at least seventy-five per cent of the premiums collected in the state? It is our money, let us keep it at home.

It is better to provide funds for developing a western community than it is to accumulate them in a great financial center to be employed by trust magnates in crushing a competitor. A bank commanding more money than is kept in the United States Treasury and whose financial head draws a salary greater than is drawn by the President of the United States is a real danger and when we reflect that there are already a dozen such banks jointly owned having a common directorate, it is a public calamity.

If I were directly interested and concerned in financial affairs, I would not cease to demand that the capital stock of a bank should be in some way limited in proportion to the aggregate of the population served, and that its deposits should never exceed a certain per cent of its capital stock. I would not allow an inter-

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Secretary C. R. Frost of the Minnesota Bankers Association has shaped up the program for the Minnesota Bankers Association's twentieth annual convention sufficiently definitely to give out the details. One of the features will be the amusement program which will include a boat trip to Big Island in the middle of lower Lake Minnetonka, a point the bankers have never visited in the several conventions at the lake. The resort has been opened since the last meeting there. The Tonka Bay hotel will be headquarters as before. The convention will be on June 14th and 15th. This date is unusually early and it is a new feature to have the convention so early in the week.

Business sessions will be held both mornings, the election of officers on the second day. The speakers will be William J. Olcott of Duluth, president of the Oliver Iron Mining Company on "The Iron and Steel Interests of Minnesota," an address which promises much interesting "stuff"; William B. Joyce of New York, president of the National Surety Company, on "Bonds and Burglary Insurance"; George E. Roberts, president of the Commercial National of Chicago, on "Postal Savings Banks"; Congressman F. M. Nye of Minneapolis, on "The Tariff," which will be a source of information on the puzzling subject first hand; Fred I. Kent of New York, vice-president of the Bankers' Trust Company, on "The American Bankers Association Travelers' Cheques"; Senator L. O. Thorpe of Willmar, Minn., on "Recent Banking Legislation in Minnesota and Its Results." Mr. Thorpe presented the association bill providing for the new separate bank supervision department for Minnesota; Fred E. Farnsworth, secretary of the A. B. A., "Problems of the American Bankers' Association."

On the afternoon of the first day will be the annual excursion. Chartered boats will make the upper and lower lake trip. At Big Island park a buffet luncheon will be served until 8 p. m. The Minnesota Bankers Association has bought the privileges and attractions of the resort for the day and anyone wearing a convention button can do as he likes free of charge. Dignified financiers and junior clerks will ride the figure "8", negotiate the Dutch mill, laugh in the laughing gallery, visit the Yellowstone park and take in other amusements free of charge. In the evening the bankers will adjourn to the Twin City Rapid Transit company's pavilion on the island, one of the best in the country, where they will witness a vaudeville performance that will put to shame the efforts of the big syndicate to amuse the patrons of the circuit theaters. Impressario C. R. Frost has no "trust" affiliations and will buy his "continuous bill" wherever he likes. Boats will return the party to the main land at 10:30 p. m. W. I. Prince is predestined to succeed Joseph Chapman, Jr., as president. Mr. Prince is now vice-president. L. Whitmore, of Wabasha, the treasurer and Mr. Frost is the secretary.

One of the interesting reports of the convention will be that of the methods of the operation of the Interstate Protective Association of which Mr. Frost is manager. The association is the organization which protects the banks of the five northwestern states against the aggressions of yegg men. It is promised that the report will be a revelation of the intrinsic value of the association such as will surprise the bankers who have had only a general knowledge of what has been going on.

Group Four of South Dakota

Fifty bankers attended the meeting of Group Four of the South Dakota Bankers Association on May 12th at Mitchell. Chamberlain was selected as the next meeting place. An automobile ride and a dinner were the two entertainment features. John L. Jones, state bank examiner, made the dinner address. W. Hill of Alexandria is the new president and J. Welch of Mitchell the secretary. The meetings hereafter will be held semiannually.

A new bank is to be organized at Davis, C.

Bank Topics by Frank J. Wyckoff, at Enid

One of the best things at the Enid convention of Oklahoma bankers was a series of bright, epigrammatic paragraphs gotten off by Frank J. Wyckoff under the general head of "Bank Topics." Mr. Wyckoff is president of the State Bank of Commerce (was a national) and is organizing the new Tradesmen's State Bank at Oklahoma City. He is an ardent convert to guaranty. Following are some of his paragraphs:

Among all the topics of interest to the state banker none I presume claims attention so insistently as that of bank guaranty, which is now beginning to be viewed in the calm, deliberate way which always comes when time has modified the indignation, allayed the fears and tempered the enthusiasm prevalent at its birth. After all the apprehension and predictions, the bills introduced in congress, the acts of state legislatures, the wrangling of politicians, the editorial criticisms of newspaperdom, the bank guaranty seems to go smoothly along, and the country to continue on in its course of uninterrupted prosperity, all of which brings us to the world-old conclusion that things are never so bad as they seem.

Finally, I believe the bank guaranty law will depend for its success wholly upon the vigilance, courage, probity of the head of the state banking board. So long as these remain all that they should be the institution is probably safe from disaster, but any loosening of the hold and mastery of the commissioner's firm hand will result in widespread evil and possibly the final downfall of the system. Fortunately for Oklahoma her experiment began under the guidance of one of the ablest and most courageous young men among all of the remarkably able and successful young bankers of which this state is so justly proud, and is at the present time being safely and successfully piloted by another strong and masterly hand behind which is both courage and ability together with the enthusiasm and that firm belief in the rectitude of his purposes so necessary to the successful administration of any great official trust.

A very important topic is that of present day methods of obtaining business. Business that is bought and paid for in cash is usually not worth the money. The idea of the pessimist that there is no heart or soul in business and that it is wholly a cold blooded proposition, is entirely wrong. The personal equation is today the greatest single factor in business and the bank that persistently gives personal service will gain business faster and hold it more securely than the one which proceeds upon the theory that business can be purchased with valuable considerations.

One of the principal reasons for the waste of time in the management of a bank is the proneness of the managing officer to attempt the personal carrying out of little details which not only consume his time but many times his temper and spirits as well. The trite proverb that "anything worth doing at all is worth doing well," is not denied in the argument, but it can be stated as equally true that folks who do little things best usually cannot do large things at all, and those who can do large things well should not attempt little things at all. After an experience of many years, from having, through natural inclination, never asked another to do anything which I could possibly do myself, I have come almost to a belief in the policy of never doing anything myself which I can procure done as well by others.

I once had a customer who told me that he never could get away from the idea that each depositor's money was kept in a separate compartment in the vaults and that when his account ran down very low we were wont to go daily and look in his little receptacle and remark upon the very small pile left therein. I have since many times been inclined to believe that the indulging of such fancies should be encouraged in the hope that it might be the means of deterring some from attempting to extract more money from an already empty receptacle.

Another topic which is far from being of the least importance in the banking business is the subject of loans. No bank is better than its loans—the integrity of this item determines the character of the bank. Samuel Johnson once said that "Men are seldom if ever more innocently employed than when honestly making money," and the principal object of the business of banking is honestly making money. The getting of business, the caring for its details after getting it, the service to the patron at the windows and elsewhere in the bank are all of importance, but in the handling of the loans practically all the money in the banking business is either made or lost.

I know of no rule for the making of loans, many have been formulated but none are adequate to guide the untrained banker. The ability to make loans which will collect themselves is based upon judgment, and judgment is an intuitive thing, born with the individual. It is capable of development and broad training and no man is so thoroughly equipped for the business of loaning money as the man with natural judgment matured by years of experience. In its absence it cannot be imparted and an individual devoid of it must be content, if he would be useful at all in the banking business, to remain beneath the position of a managing officer.

It is seldom that there is found in one individual the ability to successfully make loans combined with the elements of popularity, but when this is found you have the ideal country banker. All the arts and amenities of life usually employed to please and satisfy, the kindly expression, the glad handshake, the sympathy and salve for every wound, the patient listening to every tale of woe, may become second nature with every one about the bank; but to him before whom every request is laid, falls the duty of finally saying yes or no to every proposition, and since, in the nature of things, he must say no many more times than yes, it is a task requiring all the skill, tact, diplomacy there is in a man to do this and keep sweet himself and make the customer feel that he has received only the kindness and good advice which in some subtle way will do him more good than the thing he asked for, and depart with his heart full of thankfulness for the benefits received. The nearest approach to a rule for loans which I have been able to find is that they should be made only to reputable people for legitimate business purposes, moderate in amounts, and either based directly upon responsible security or made to honorable holders of merchandise which has a constant and adequate value in an available market.

Reforming the Banking Laws

The men in congress and in the state legislatures could do no better, if sincere in wishing to reform the banking laws, than to summon the presidents and ex-presidents of the state bankers associations to give their testimony. They are of the best, trusted and honored of their fellows, and have had exceptional opportunities to study the weakness and shortcomings of banking laws. They also can tell why it is so difficult to pass regulating statutes in states where private banking still is tolerated. W. G. P. Harding, president of the Alabama bankers, is no exception to the rule, but is a trifle more outspoken and observant than usual. His annual address at Mobile gave an inkling of what he might tell a state or national commission intent upon reforming the laws. Referring to his own state, right at home, to Alabama bankers President Harding said: "It is a matter of regret that our banking laws in Alabama are not up to the standard of the national bank act. In many of the older states the banking laws are all that they should be, and are in some respects superior to the laws governing national banks; but in our own state, and generally speaking, in states where there is a sentiment for the guaranty of deposits, the state banking laws are crude, inadequate and not rigidly enforced. A state banking system is fundamentally as sound as a national banking system, and there is no reason why state banks could not be fully as safe as the national banks. There are a number of banks in Alabama operating under a state charter which are admittedly as sound as any national bank in the United States, and it should be the desire of all bankers, whether state or national, to bring them all up to this high standard. For a number of years there were no laws in Alabama as to the supervision and regulation of state banks, and it was during the term of a prominent state banker as president of this association, and mainly as the result of his efforts that such laws as we now have on the subject were enacted. These laws are not as perfect, nor as comprehensive as he and a number of the state bankers desired to have them, but it was necessary to make some compromises in order to secure any legislation whatever on the subject. Our present laws require the publication by state banks of only two reports a year, and these are made within three months of each other; one toward the close of the old year, and the other near the beginning of the new, at a time when all the banks are stronger in cash resources than at any other. It is generally the rule that from February to November no published statements are made by state banking institutions. There is no reason why state banks should not be required to acquaint the public with their condition as often as the national banks do, which is five times a year. Many of them do this voluntarily, but the majority, I believe, publish statements only when required."

Mr. Harding struck hard at the tendency to start banks in small towns which could not support a bank willing only to do a legitimate business. In this he was backed up by the groups. His hardest hit was where he told how there "are about 250 state banks in Alabama reporting to the state treasurer, all under the supervision of one examiner. It is absolutely impossible for the examinations of our state banks to be thorough under the present system. With the large number of banks operating under state charters, it is physically impracticable for one examiner to reach a bank oftener than once in every fourteen or fifteen months. Experience has demonstrated the necessity of frequent examination of banks, and officers and stockholders of banking institutions should not object to paying reasonable fees for having complete examinations made. To handle the business properly, there should be at least two more examiners, whose compensation should be provided for by assessments levied on the banks in proportion to their capital stock, just as the expenses of national bank examiners are defrayed. Our laws should promote sound and responsible banking, and should be so framed as to make it difficult for irresponsible men to obtain charters in the first place, or to keep in business should they manage to organize. In short, the whole banking system should be kept on so high a plane as to minimize any demand for a guaranty of deposits by a bank, other than that of its own capital, surplus and character." The strictness of President Harding made instant impression upon his hearers and reforms in banking conditions in Alabama are to be expected. All association presidents will do well to follow Mr. Harding's lead and speak plainly of abuses where there are any.

The Dolliver Following

Judging from the editorial expressions to be found in all democratic papers and in all really important republican papers, Senator Dolliver of Iowa only expressed the public mind on the question of tariff revision. It is a subject upon which the man of strong convictions can scarcely speak in moderation. Probably the Kansas City Star stated the public's view as well as any. The Star holds that "the most effective tariff revision speech yet made in this session of congress was that of Senator Dolliver of Iowa." Mr. Dolliver told the truth. He did not tell the whole truth for that could not be told in a single day. And no one knows the whole truth about this wonderfully constructed tariff bill. Beside Mr. Dolliver has been too good a protectionist to become an expert revisionist on short notice. But just because he is a consistent protectionist and a loyal republican, his charges of bad faith, of trickery and of extortion in this matter of the woolen schedules, to which he confined himself almost exclusively, will be particularly effective before the people.

A revisionist republican will be about the only kind the people will support at the next election should the trust-dictated patchwork from the Aldrich back room become a law. The tariff protectionist who is such for private gain, and who not only robs the public but those whom he pretends to protect, belong with the union labor advocate who believes that in stopping funerals or killing non-union laborers, he is advancing the cause of labor. They belong in one class. They are unspeakable, moral outlaws, and let us cheer on the knights in armor, such as Senator Dolliver who engage in the public's behalf.

Death of Helge A. Haugan

In the sudden death of Helge A. Haugan, on Monday, Chicago lost a far outstanding figure from among her leading citizens and bankers and financial circles, a man who had contributed largely to the high reputation of the city in that line. For almost half a century he has been a citizen of blameless life, a man of courage, whose business instincts were good who offended no one. At the time of his death he was president of the State Bank of Chicago, vice-president of the Clearing House Association, president of the Bankers' Club, and a director of the Title and Trust Company. His success in business is a tribute to his faithfulness, industry, and integrity. In his honor Joseph T. Talbert, president of the Chicago Clearing House Association, named the presidents of the member banks of the association as honorary pallbearers. A meeting of the association was held and suitable resolutions adopted. Chicago bankers attended the funeral on Thursday in a body.

Mr. Haugan was born in Christiania, Norway, on Oct. 26, 1848. He went to Montreal, Que., in 1859, and learned the steam fitting and brass finishing trade, which he entered in Chicago in 1862.

With John R. Lindgren he established the banking house of Haugan & Lindgren in 1870 at 57-59 La Salle street. The firm was reorganized in 1891 as the State Bank of Chicago, with Mr. Haugan as president.

On the very day of his death the stockholders of the bank were to have voted an increase of the State Bank's capital from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, but Vice-President L. A. Goddard postponed the meeting thirty days, and at the same time, in absence of Mr. Lindgren, assumed control of the bank. Bankers have taken it for granted that Mr. Goddard will be elected to the presidency at the next meeting.

We all take life too seriously. We stint and starve to save, devote our time to doing penance being good in preparation for a life to come. We pass through this very Garden of Eden, this real heaven, making sacrifices, omitting opportunities, leaving the sweet flowers of pleasure unplucked, the bounty of nature untouched—all—all—for an ethereal dream of a future that may never come. Spokane, May 19.—Exchange National Bank, the first financial institution in Spokane to have $1,000,000 capital, was 20 years in active operation on May 4th. Its charter has just been renewed. The bank was organized by Jacob Hoover, George Lauman, I. S. Kaufman, J. E. Gandy, W. H. Wiscombe and others on May 4, 1889, when the population of Spokane was estimated at 18,000. Jacob Hoover was its first president and the capital was $100,000. Several years afterward this was increased to $250,000. Its statement on February 18, 1898, showed deposits of $1,023,700. It passed through the panic of 1893-4. The capital was increased to $750,000 in January, 1907, and raised to $1,000,000 two years later. Before the extension of the bank's charter the national bank examiners conducted a thorough audit of the bank and their report proves that its affairs are in splendid condition. At present the bank's assets are $6,500,000. The officers and directors are: President, Edwin T. Coman; vice-presidents, Thomas H. Brewer and William Huntley; cashier, C. E. McBroom; assistant cashiers, E. N. Seale and M. W. Lewer; directors, F. A. Blackwell, George R. Dodson, D. T. Ham, F. T. Post, Arthur D. Jones, E. J. Roberts, G. B. Dennis, L. F. Connolly, Louis I. Ostroski, Albert Held, Miles C. Moore and F. M. Rothrock.

Buy Spokane School Bonds

A. B. Leach & Company and the W. R. Compton Bond & Mortgage Company, both of Chicago, bought $400,000 of Spokane school bonds at a premium of $22,670 on May 3d. The bonds are for 20 years and bear 4½ per cent interest. They sold at $105.66. The purchasers were represented by the Old National Bank, E. H. Rollins & Co., of Boston, and the Harris Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, also bid jointly for the bonds, offering a premium of $21,720.

Spokane Bank Clearings

Bank clearings in Spokane for April amounted to $30,562,444, against $24,280,654 a year ago. The banner month in the history of the city was in October, 1907, when $33,272,411 was reported. There have been three months between the dates given when the clearings exceeded the $30,000,000 mark, but only exceeded April, 1909, by small amounts. The record is the highest for April since the clearing house was established. Clearings for the week ended May 6th amounted to $6,618,661, a gain of $1,119,647 or 20 per cent over the same week in 1908.

State Revenue from Express Companies Large

Forty-two thousand dollars is the approximate amount of revenue the state of Washington will receive this year from its tax of 5 per cent on business of the express companies. Two companies have reported to the state tax commission on business during the 12 months ended March 31, 1909. The Pacific Express Company reports $42,259, as against $46,497 the previous year. The tax will be $2,113. The Great Northern Express Company reports $272,136, with tax of $13,606. This company reported $253,169 in 1908. The aggregate business of all companies was $839,549 in 1908, when they paid $41,977 in taxes.

New Law for Loan Agencies

Salary loan agencies doing business in the state of Washington will not be able to procure an assignment of wages after June 12th without the consent of the borrower's employer, and if he is married, he must also have the consent of his wife. The new law provides that no assignment of or order for wages to be earned to secure a loan of less than $300 shall be valid against the employer of the person making the assignment or order unless it is accepted by the employer and recorded with the county auditor, also that no assignment of or order for wages to be earned shall be valid when made by a married man, unless the written consent of his wife to the making of such assignment or order is attached thereto.

New State Bank Opened

Kootenai County State Bank at St. Maries, Idaho, with a capitalization of $25,000, opened its doors for business on April 27th. The officers are: President, William Dollar; first vice-president, William Trueman; second vice-president, Roy C. Lammers; cashier, J. G. Fralick; director, Leon Demars.

Sentenced to Five Years for Embezzlement

J. A. Marcil, formerly teller of the Exchange National Bank, convicted in the federal court of eastern Washington on a charge of embezzlement, has been sentenced by Judge Edward Whitson to five years in the federal prison at McNeill's island. Marcil was convicted on several counts charging embezzlement of sums aggregating $200. A new trial was denied.

Enlarge Bank Premises

The Baker-Boyer bank at Walla Walla, Wash., will be enlarged this year, the company just having secured 36 feet frontage on Main Street with 120 feet depth. With this additional space the bank building can be extended to a 50-foot frontage. The owners plan to erect a first-class building, which will be fitted with modern appointments.

Banking Notes

Inter-City Debate

Minneapolis

Following are the affirmative papers prepared by the debaters representing Chicago chapter in the inter-city debate between teams from Chicago and Minneapolis chapters, American Institute of Banking, held at Minneapolis Saturday evening, May 15th. The question:

Resolved, "That it would be to the best interests of the country to allow national banks to issue credit currency."

Chicago: Affirmative.

Minneapolis: Negative.

Chicago debaters:

Ralph R. Sleeper, Continental National Bank.

Harold W. Dorn, Commercial National Bank.

Benjamin B. Bellows, Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company.

First Affirmative: Ralph R. Sleeper, Continental National, Chicago

We have not come from Chicago to advance a new theory or scheme, nor do we intend to droll out to you by lengthy scientific phrases or catch-word expressions the intricacies of commerce and of banking with which the bank clerk daily comes in contact in that great central market. We have come to defend a proposition which needs no defense. We have come to discuss, if you please, a question the answer of which you must concede is self evident. And I want to say now before any one shall have formed a wrong opinion, that we are not so attached to the question under discussion as to believe that its solution will serve as a panacea for all our financial difficulties, nor that it will settle for all times the ills of our banking system. Each phase of the work must be perfected and all the separate parts must be made to work together so as to bring the banking and currency system of our country to its highest point of efficiency. And then behind all this must stand the true honesty and integrity of American citizens, without which the greatest plan and system must be an utter failure.

And, further, before I begin my argument, I must exhort you to cast aside your prejudices and open your minds to a conviction of the truth. You cannot convince a bigot. How many centuries was it before old Europe would believe that there was land across the great ocean. And the historians tell us that these learned people used to tap their heads as old Columbus passed by in the streets of Seville. I hope no one will resort to such practices tonight for we might be disturbed by the hollow echo from within.

Man moves and changes. His life is a continuous drama of ups and downs; first this way and then that; every moment brings a new condition and he clutches blindly for every seeming place of vantage. We could hardly expect so changeable nature to develop anything perfectly uniform and regular. And although at times the desires of a community have a semblance of regularity, even then such periods are of short duration. Commerce, the product of man's labor, swells and falls in volume; ever changing like its creator. I am not here to recite definitions, but I would say that whatever else money may be, it certainly serves as the third article by means of which one man may sell the goods which he produces and buy from other producers what he does not or cannot make himself. It is what makes possible the great commerce of your city, of our country, and of the world. And so, when there is a great boom, so to speak, in commercial activity, there is a greater need for money to carry on this increased business, and when this activity slackens the need for a large part of this money used during the period of increased activity, departs. For an instance, let us take a small town which, in the midst of a rush season keeps in daily use about $5,000.00. Now, when business slackens, there is less need for money and the town banker finds that he has, say, $3,000.00 which is no longer needed for carrying on the town's business. It is also plain to him that this money will be an actual loss to him if it remains idle in his vaults, so the only thing for him to do is to loan it out. It cannot be loaned in town, for the legitimate business of the town has no need for more than the $2,000.00 which it is using.

Therefore this extra money must go to promote some speculative enterprise or else it will be sent out of the town at any rate of interest that the banker can get for it. This case is only one instance of thousands of similar ones. Millions of dollars pile up in the large reserve cities like Chicago and New York. And large sums of this money which banks now call reserves cannot be used in the legitimate business of these reserve cities, and so goes into every form of speculation at ridiculously low rates. But it is only a matter of months when this surplus money is needed again by these thousands of small communities throughout the South and West.

Then we have our stringency. Sometimes we pull through such periods by cramping legitimate business; every so often, however, the money gets so tied up that there seems to be no way of untangling it, and we go through the experience of seeing bankers and business men all over the country fighting almost for their very existence. Now, in view of this condition of affairs, does it not seem self-evident that a currency which, when it is no longer needed, can be retired, and one which can expand when the need for more currency again rises will tend to prevent, or, at any rate, ease such strained conditions as we experienced in the fall of 1907.

I contend that whatever may be any person's views, in regard to money or currency, he must admit that some form of circulating medium which expands in volume as commerce increases and which contracts and is retired when there is no longer any need for it, is a necessity in any important country. And I challenge any one to disprove this statement. There must be a contraction during dull seasons to keep surplus money from being tied up in speculative enterprises, and there must be expansion to facilitate the handling of increased business during such seasons. In other words, a country's currency must be elastic.

Gold and silver coin, or any form of metallic money cannot expand or contract. It is fixed in amount. But since there is always a large amount of money in circulation this coin or metallic money serves as what we may call the foundation layer of our currency which arises from the making of checks on bank credit accounts or deposits is the most elastic form of currency known. Now, with this coin as a base, and our deposit circulation as the part of the currency which fluctuates in quantity with the movements of commerce, it would seem that we already have a most elastic form of credit currency, which ought to satisfy all our needs. But, strange as it may seem to you professional bankers, it is nevertheless a fact that everybody does not have a bank account and that some of our people live miles away from a banking town. And, in order to show that there are a people who must have a currency which will pass without endorsement. I need only point to the fact that the spring and fall demand for bearer currency in the South and West varies to the extent of about $250,000,000 each season. These are the people in whom all our interest is centered this evening. The people who, for various reasons, cannot use the only elastic form of currency that we have; that is our deposit circulation.

The government requires a deposit of United States bonds equal in amount to every dollar of national bank notes issued. Therefore we readily see that the government really issues all the note circulation of the country and merely distributes it by the aid of the national banks. The government also issues in remembrance of the Civil War period nearly $350,000,000 in "green-backs," and holds a gold reserve of $150,000,000 to insure their redemption. Government issues can be increased only by arbitrary government action. They can be decreased only by redemption, but since there is no motive to cause quick redemption they stay out until the paper becomes torn and mutilated. Our national bank notes remain in circulation on the average over two years. Furthermore, the government has no way of ascertaining the amount of currency necessary at any particular time.

It is, therefore, an indisputable fact that the increase or decrease of our present circulation is not in accordance with the fluctuations in the volume of trade, but rather in accordance with the speculative value of government bonds. I quote, as specific proof of this, the following, from the Report of the Indianapolis Monetary Convention.

"From 1882-1889 there was a steady advance in the price of government bonds; the 4s of 1907 having risen from 103 in 1880 to 129 in 1889. In 1880 and '81, while these bonds were selling between 103-112 there was some increase in the national bank circulation; but the price touched 120 in 1882, and for nine years thereafter, the bonds being high priced, there was a steady decrease in the note circulation of the national banks. The financial panic of 1890 caused a fall in the prices of government bonds, and thereby increased the chances of profit on the circulation of national bank notes. As a result, there was a net increase of $13,000,000 in their circulation in 1891, and of $8,000,000 in 1892. Now, in these two years, there was absolutely no demand for an increase in the circulating medium of this country, as the government was putting $25-50 million in silver paper money in circulation."

I have, therefore, clearly demonstrated two principles in regard to our currency, namely: that elasticity is an essential to our currency just as it is to the currency of every important country, and that our present currency being in reality a government currency, is not, nor can be, regulated by the increase in the volume of commerce at different seasons of the year.

If then, as we have shown, the government cannot furnish us a bearer currency necessary for the full development of our commerce, we will have to rely on the bankers, the men who are ever in touch with the varying conditions of commerce, and who supply us with the only form of elastic currency we have to-day.

But, in our endeavor to give one quality to our currency, we should not sacrifice an equally important quality which it has taken us years to develop; in other words, we should not import elasticity at the expense of safety. Such action would be wholly unwarranted, especially since it is unnecessary. Are we so fond of a government debt as to believe that we should keep it always increasing so as to have something on which to base our note circulation, or are we not ready to accept a currency which is based upon the true American industry and enterprise of our manufacturers, of our merchants and of our farmers? We have accepted it as the basis for the issue of over ninety-five per cent of our paper money. Are we afraid that this strength that has made us the great nation that we are, cannot stand the strain of the other five per cent? We might protect the abuse of this power of issue by every good safeguard that we know of. We might establish a guaranty fund, we might require a deposit of a portion of a bank's ordinary assets, or by any other method. But, let us have a currency which is issued and redeemed by our banks, and, therefore, elastic. Let us have a currency which is secured by the credit of American industry, and is, therefore, sound, yes, sounder, I believe, than the currency of any other nation in the world.

Second Affirmative: Harold W. Dorn, Commercial National, Chicago

My colleague who has already spoken has shown the great variety of plans under which the currency of our country has been issued in the past, the varying degrees of success with which these have met, and the altogether unsatisfactory condition in which we find our currency to-day as a result of our past financial experiments. It devolves upon me to prove that a credit bank-note currency is the best form of paper money which has yet been devised,—the best both from the point of view of theory and because it eliminates the actual disadvantages of other systems.

For the sake of clearness and convenience, I shall take for granted that you are familiar only in a very general way with the question of a banking currency. Why, you might ask, do we need any paper money at all? Why not have a currency entirely metallic and do away with all the vexing problems of its substitutes? But, you know very well that all the gold that has been coined would not unaided do the work of the world of commerce: that gold coin is commonly useful only as the measure of value and while it has intrinsic worth that makes it acceptable in foreign exchanges, it is neither necessary nor desirable that this bulky and uneconomical medium should unaided serve us as money. So we have built upon it a vast structure of substitutes, generally redeemable in this standard, to which belong not only the purer asset currencies of European countries, the restricted bond secured bank-notes of the United States, and the government issues of certificates and notes with which we have complicated our currency, but all the enormous volume of checks and drafts which circulates daily throughout the world. This deposit and check system is as truly currency—and asset or credit currency of the purest kind—as the bank-note. Its general acceptance in commercial centers, its redeemability, its economy, its perfect flexibility and elasticity make it almost ideal. While it is, of course, a private currency, the check is a form of credit currency evidently because it is redeemable out of the general assets of the bank: You might say here, what need to go further, why have bank-notes at all?

But a check system works ideally only in its own locality. We must be sure of the standing of the bank and the drawer to accept it; it has no guaranty otherwise to protect us. More, while it satisfies the commercial man of the city, it does not so readily pass currency with our farmers or our laborers. In our imperfect state of society, we want a more tangible evidence of real value. And this is supplied by the credit bank-note, with the advantages of the check and others which that medium lacks. We maintain then that credit currency—a system of bank-notes based upon the general assets of the issuing banks—is the best form of a bearer paper currency. It is so, in the first place, theoretically.

A bank-note has been defined as a "promise made by a banker to pay a definite sum to bearer at sight." It may be noted here, incidentally, that bank-notes, being a form of credit, have always been issued by banks as their right, and not as government money. This note may be either fully covered by coin, or partly covered by commercial paper and securities; when the latter, as Conant observes, it is not necessary that the issuer possess the full amount of metallic currency he promises, so long as his reputation and his other assets inspire confidence in his ability to pay. This note with the latter form of security is the credit note, and such a currency based on commercial assets, in the form of short term paper, affords the best security in the world for its redemption. In the panic of '73 in New York bankers loaned on commercial paper when they would not loan on stocks and bonds. The former represent titles to real and marketable products; if anything on earth has value, they have. The credit bank-note is safe, always provided, of course, that the issuing bank is under efficient law and competent supervision and that adequate provision is made for its redemption.

It follows, then, that a credit currency is a great economy of the precious metals. Not so much so as the check system, you say, but the difference is more than compensated for by the safety and universal acceptance of the latter. It is a conspicuous factor in the upbuilding of new countries, such as Canada, where the actual supply of precious metals is small and the demand for capital large. Of course, a government note issue such as ours is economical, but it is absolutely inflexible. A bank-note system may be said to be the most efficient extension of credit, taking all points into account, that we can have.

Next, it is a means for the most efficient distribution of capital. Every note holder is a borrower from the bank. He is using his credit with it and increasing his working capital to the extent he holds its notes. The amount of gold accumulated there from the surplus of other men is at his disposal as a basis for credit to several times that amount in the form of notes. These notes are really the credit of the community split up into small amounts, and as such they have a special advantage over either checks or coin in rural communities and among wage earners and small traders. Men can exchange notes anywhere without exchange, as in the case of checks; there is less danger of losing them than with the metals.

In the fourth place a credit currency results in a low discount rate. The banker is enabled to extend his loans, under the name of notes, to the limit, or as near it as temporary conditions allow. By using these instead of metallic currency, he makes a saving of from two to one to four to one in actual investment. With our free banking system, he is competing in the selling of his additional credit all the time with his brother bankers, and the result is a saving to all borrowers. In whatever country note issue is restricted, interest rates are driven higher than they should be. Canada, for instance, though a new country, has a lower rate than we do, because of her credit currency, expanding to meet her needs.

In the last place, this response of a currency to the needs of a country is peculiarly characteristic of credit bank-note issues. It is agreed by every one that elasticity—next to security—is the main object of a monetary system. Bank-notes are issued to the borrower as the direct result of a business transaction; they are retired as soon as that obligation is discharged. Their volume increases as trade increases and is perfectly adjusted at all times to the needs of the community and the nation. We sometimes hear it said in this connection that banks will issue notes in excess of their needs and promote speculation. But is it not inevitable that the amount of notes will vary according to the public needs, according to the unfailing law of supply and demand? Professor Bonamy Price says "Bank-notes are tools and their quantity will be regulated by the specific work there is for them to do." The only requisites in keeping a note issue restricted to legitimate demand and preventing speculation are a flexible discount rate and a system of prompt redemption.

So much for the evident advantages of a credit currency in theory. How does it compare to other systems in actual operation? And we must remember that credit currency to-day has the approval of the leading European nations and has stood the test of good times and evil times far better than our own conglomeration of makeshifts. It is worthy of note that those countries which approach nearest to the pure flexible credit currency have the least trouble in times of panic. Do not the laws of economics apply as well to us?

The Bank of England has a restricted credit currency. It works well in ordinary times and is probably one of the safest systems in the world. Yet at each panic the bank finds it necessary to suspend its limitations and issue a pure credit currency freely to save its life and the country. It is the assurance that money can be obtained that quiets fear, and causes people to be satisfied without that for which they otherwise clamor. A credit currency without arbitrary restriction, based only on a safe percentage of reserve, is the greatest source of confidence to trade. Thus we see

A Sketch of the Comptroller's Office

By Frank W. Bryant, National Bank
Examiner at Oklahoma City, read at the Enid Convention :: ::

In view of the publicity which at present is being given to the question of improvement of the banking systems in the various states and in the nation, it has occurred to me that a short talk on the general workings of the currency bureau or the office of the comptroller of the currency, as it is more widely known, would be of interest to the members of this association.

The rank and file of the people have rather vague ideas of the difference between national banks, state banks, savings banks, private banks, and trust companies. It is well known that many popular ideas are mere illusions in which the public is too often humored for the sake of the business that may be gotten out of it. Those of you who are operating national banks have often been asked the question, "Is this a First national bank?" and had to argue a new customer out of the idea that there is a difference between a First national bank and any other national bank. The legislature of this state has but recently found it necessary to pass a stringent law forbidding state banks to advertise that their deposits are guaranteed by the state of Oklahoma, all because of a popular impression that has gone abroad.

The banking institutions of this country may be classed under two headings:

The national banking system.

The various state systems.

The latter may be subdivided into as many systems as there are states in the union, and includes all state banks, savings banks, and trust companies. There is also another class of banks that might be mentioned, that of private banks, which still exist in some states, but these are more or less regulated by state laws.

The national banking system was created by act of congress February 25, 1863, and covers every national bank from Maine to California, from Alaska and Hawaii to Porto Rico. In this connection it might be of interest to notice that there are four national banks in Hawaii, two in Alaska, and one in Porto Rico. The banks now operating under national laws number nearly 7,000. It is obvious that in creating such a system congress necessarily created a bureau to have charge of and to execute all laws regulating the national banks. This bureau is called the currency bureau and its chief officer the comptroller of the currency. The first man to hold this position was Hugh McCulloch, of Indiana, who was appointed by President Lincoln, and who was one of the leading financiers of his day. Twelve men have held this position since the creation of the office, the present incumbent being Lawrence O. Murray, of New York, with whom you are rapidly becoming acquainted through his famed twenty-nine questions to the directors.

The offices of the comptroller are very pleasantly situated on the second floor of the Treasury building, in the northwest corner, overlooking the grounds of the White House. Mr. Murray is ably assisted by two deputy comptrollers, Thomas P. Kane and W. P. Fowler, both of whom have been connected with the office for many years and have been powerful factors in organizing and building up the splendid working force of 120 clerks who perform the detail and routine work of the comptroller's office. The office is divided into six divisions, viz., organization, reports, issue, redemption, bookkeepers, and insolvent divisions, each in charge of a chief of division.

If you commence the organization of a national bank your application goes at once to the organization division, in charge of E. Southall, and here also are handled all matters in connection with the liquidation of banks or the extension of charters. From here is issued the weekly bulletin of the comptroller's office showing the changes in officers, organization and liquidation of banks, approval of reserve agents, etc. To the organization division goes also all the articles of association, organization papers, oaths of directors, signatures of officers, lists of stockholders, and reports of annual meetings which you are required to forward. Having complied with the organization requirements and having deposited with the treasurer of the United States bonds equal in amount to at least one-fourth of the capital stock, or not less than $50,000.00 in case the capital stock exceeds $150,000.00, and in no case greater than the amount of the capital stock, the comptroller of the currency will then issue to the bank a certificate of authority to commence business.

The next division brought to your attention will be the issue division, in charge of W. W. Eldridge, and it is here that the bank receives the supply of national bank notes which it issues to its customers and for the protection of which it has deposited the United States bonds. Right here I wish to call your attention to the proper entries which should be made on the books of your bank when you receive circulating notes from the issue division of the comptroller's office. This is important as a great many bankers, I may say a majority of the bankers, do not understand this matter thoroughly. That is that the circulating notes of your bank are not cash when received from the comptroller's office, and should not be debited to the cash account upon receipt. When the bills have been signed by the officers, cash account should be debited and circulation account credited with only such amounts as the tellers can pay out during the day's business. In other words, the circulation account should show the amount of your bank's notes which are outstanding in the hands of the public. Any amount of your notes on hand in the bank are not outstanding.

The redemption division of the comptroller's office is under the direction of E. E. Schreiner and as its name implies has charge of the redemption of the worn-out money issued by the banks. All of the notes unfit for use are ground into pulp in a huge macerator in the presence of four persons, one appointed by the secretary of the treasury, one by the treasurer of the United States, one by the comptroller, and one by the bank. This is one of the duties which your agent in Washington performs.

The insolvent division is in charge of Judge Oldham. When a bank is placed in the hands of a receiver its affairs are turned over to this division and here are handled all matters relating to the collection of its assets and the payment of dividends to its creditors.

The division with which the active banks are brought most in contact is the reports division, in charge of A. A. Clemmons, and as this is the division with which I was connected for nearly six years, it is naturally most familiar to me. This division is subdivided into two parts, one dealing with the reports of banks and the other having charge of those of the national bank examiners. The reports with which you as bankers are all familiar, the reports of condition which are called for by the comptroller five times a year and the semiannual earning and dividend reports, are all handled and examined in this division. For about two or three weeks after the comptroller issues the notice of a call for a statement from all national banks, this office is the busiest spot in the government service. As fast as the reports are received from the banks, the figures are abstracted on large sheets, each holding the statements of about sixty-five banks, the figures of each being entered horizontally on the abstract sheets under appropriate headings. It is in this manner that the total figures of all the banks in each state and in reserve cities are obtained as published in the printed report issued by the comptroller after each call for a statement. The law provides that each bank shall transmit the report called for within five days and officers who have forgotten to comply within the required time have found to their sorrow that a fine of $100.00 per day is the price of forgetfulness. Prompt action is appreciated by the comptroller and a bank should if possible forward its report the same day the notice is received.

The other section of the reports division has charge of the confidential reports of the national bank examiners comprising an active force of over ninety men divided into eleven districts. In the locked files of this division repose the secrets of all the financial institutions in the national system. Be they strong or weak, everything must be laid bare to the examiners. When the reports of the examiners are received here they are carefully examined and letters are written to the banks calling attention to all matters which are subject to criticism, as violations of the law or of conservative banking. These letters go to the comptroller for his signature and in nearly all cases call for a reply from the entire board of directors of the bank criticised. The individual directors have been brought into the "lime light" quite strongly of late by the list of twenty-nine questions they have been called upon to answer and while in many instances the replies were not very satisfactory, the general result has been an awakening of responsibility and an evident resolution on the part of the great majority to a better fulfillment of their duties as directors. It has been proven conclusively that banks which have the proper attention of the directors do not fail.

When a bank fails, its misfortune is printed in blazing headlines and exaggerated detail; but do you know how many banks are saved from failure by the prompt action of the comptroller and his examiners? No, for the comptroller is a friend to the distressed banks and their troubles do not reach the public ear but many are the banks that have been saved from disaster by timely action on the part of the examiners and the comptroller. The true examiner heeds this maxim: "It is better to save a bank than to close it."

and are awaiting the report of that body in anticipation that reforms will be urged upon congress which will give us a better system than we have to-day. It is my opinion that the establishment of a central bank together with provisions for an asset secured currency would bring the country the best results, but it is not my intention to discuss that at this time.

In closing my address I wish to say a word to the bank clerk, the man who carries on the clerical work of our banks: Young man, keep your record straight. Make your entries on the books so plain that in after years any accountant can read at a glance the history of all transactions. Don't trust things to your memory. Some day the bank examiner may discover irregularities in your bank. Then will come the time when suspicion points its finger at every employee. Then you will realize the necessity for a plain record. Above everything, young man, never touch a penny of the bank's funds. The federal prison at Leavenworth is full of men who intended to "put it back." The bookkeeper is there, the teller is there, and the bank president is there. The department of justice is no respecter of persons. If you find that the money which you handle daily is a temptation—resign your job. It is better to be chopping cotton than wearing the stripes of a convict. If you find that the management above you is crooked—resign. Don't allow your reputation to be smirched with the downfall that is sure to result. Few men realize the seriousness of these matters as the bank examiner does unless they have passed through them. Don't beg the examiner not to report your condition; it is useless for he will not neglect his sworn duty. Keep your bank in condition to welcome the examiner any day.

that the fault of the English system is not that it has a credit currency but that it does not go far enough.

It is when compared to these other systems, tried and sure, that our own opposition to a credit currency seems especially foolish. Our monetary "system" is of course a system of patches. Yet we hear talk about the advantages of the government issues of gold and silver certificates and notes. The certificates represent actual coin and as such are all right, though they possess no elasticity and make no response to the varying demands of trade. But the greenbacks (notes) should by all means be retired. They are not only inelastic: they are a political money. They could be increased by an unwise administration to any amount. The treasury issues currency only as a borrower and must do so, unless it should try to discount commercial paper. Credit currency is better than these government notes because it is issued against the assets of the banks consisting of the circulating properties of the country. If these are not good, the government could not permanently exist. The assets of banks are cash and claims upon the wealth of the country. The government, on the other hand, has only the right to tax, and this is effectual only in so far as the producing power of the country is profitably invested. It has been shown more than once in time of stress that the Bank of France, though politically subordinate, was financially stronger than the government.

But you may agree that our government should keep out of the note currency business and yet say that in our present system of bond secured national bank circulation we have a better system than credit currency. Have we? In the first place, we have in our present system, what may be called an asset currency, as my colleague has shown, but one in which the assets have been arbitrarily decided upon and set apart, until we have practically a currency issued by the government. Do you realize the makeshift character of this currency? The gradual extinction of the national debt will in time retire all the bonds on which bank-notes are issued. Of course, this currency is safe. But so would a general asset or credit currency be safe, as I pointed out just now.

My colleague has shown the results of the inelasticity of this system. How much longer are we going to keep it, just because of its needless double measure of safety? My colleague who is to follow will outline a plan which will give us a currency which has the advantages which this possesses and others in addition which make it worthy of adoption by the foremost commercial nation of the world.

To sum up—we need some kind of paper currency, we all admit. A credit currency, a system of bank-notes based upon the general assets of the issuing bank, supplies the best form, because, theoretically, it means safety, economy, wise distribution, reduction of interest rates and elasticity, and because actually it is most successful in other countries where most thoroughly applied, and because our own experience has shown us that we could profit most by its adoption. Gentlemen, a credit currency is the best form of currency yet devised and its adoption would most certainly be for the best interests of this country.

Third Affirmative: Benjamin B. Bellows, Chicago Savings Bank & Trust Company

Technically speaking, money, pure and simple, is the standard of value of the nation. In our case, and the case of all of the great commercial nations of the world, this standard is gold.

Currency, which is simply a more economical and more convenient form of money for hand to hand payment, should be, to be sound, redeemable in and backed by gold, or its actual representative. Currency should be and is usually the result of evolution, or the changing needs of business in general. And yet in this country my colleague has shown that our currency to a great extent is the result of political desires and not the demand of legitimate trade. Our silver certificates were issued against silver bullion, for the purpose of advancing the price of silver for the benefit of silver miners. At this time those certificates are backed by about one-half their face value in silver, and the other half by the credit of the government. The first speaker has also shown you that our national bank-notes, ostensibly issued as an emergency currency, were based upon government bonds, for the purpose of creating a stronger market for the same, and that other restrictions were placed upon them so as to effectually kill their primal purpose of emergency or elastic currency. On the other hand, business through the medium of the banks has evolved a system of bank checks which have grown to an enormous general use and greatly relieved the currency situation by making it possible for the business man to carry on almost his entire trade by converting his credit into such form as to easily pass from hand to hand.

I wish now that the jury bear in mind, first, that about ninety-five per cent of our commerce and trade is carried on by medium of these checks; second, that loss by this system is extremely small; and third and most important, that these checks are not issued against cash deposits, but that about eighty-five per cent of them are issued against credit deposits. That is, a customer goes to the nearest bank and asks for credit. The banker first wants to know what use it is to be put to, and second what security the man has to offer. If the purpose appears proper and the security is good, the banker credits the man on his book, which book credit is subject at any time to demand payment by the customer's check. In the central reserve cities the banker is only required to hold twenty-five per cent in cash, and in sub-reserve cities much less reserve against such demand loans. Now this system of making demand loans, based upon commercial credits, mind you, and backed by a small reserve, has proven itself and is generally accepted to be good sound banking.

We have now arrived at another stage of the game, and we find in the fall each year when our fixed currency is scarce, that the bank check or customer's check will not serve our purposes. The ignorant employees in the cities and laborers on the farm will not accept it and demand something that looks to them like our legal tender. During this season of the year Mr. Brown goes to the bank to get a loan, deposits his securities and receives a bank credit for the amount asked, and is satisfied because in his business he can use the check and currency is not necessary. Mr. White goes to the same bank with equal security and asks for the same amount, but he needs currency and is refused. "But," White says to the banker, "you loaned to Brown." "Yes, but Brown took checks and you want currency, and as currency is scarce we cannot let you have it without calling in four times that amount in other loans." "But," says White, "give me your notes, they will serve my purpose just as well." "Yes, but in order to issue that amount of notes I have to spend more than that to buy bonds to secure the issue and I would lose money on the deal." There you have the two men, both engaged in legitimate trade, both offering the same security for the same loan, and one can be favored while the other

Tallow candles, coal oil lamps, gas, electricity—four stages of progress in the world's lighting problem.

One, two, four and six cylinders—relative stages of progress in the perfection of the automobile.

Tallow candles gave light. Coal oil lamps more light. Gas still more light. And electricity surpasses them all, giving most light and avoiding all the inconveniences and all the unsanitary conditions of candles, oil and gas.

One-cylinder cars were a success. Twos were better. Fours still better. But it remained for six-cylinder cars to surpass them all, overcoming all their faults and giving to the automobile a new and probably an ultimate perfection.

This perfection commands every phase of motoring—Quietness, Sweet running, Comfort to passengers, Slow work on high in congested quarters, Range of speed on high without gear shifting, Ability to take hills on high where fours drop back to second and first, Economy of operation, and Longevity of car; and gives the Six owner the satisfaction of knowing that his car represents the utmost achievement in automobile designing and manufacturing.

These points of superiority should characterize every six-cylinder car on the market. They do characterize the

and we are prepared to show you in the car itself how surprisingly convincing Winton Six superiority really is.

The self-starter is a Winton Six feature, exclusively. Not to be found on any other car of any type. Motor starts from the seat without cranking. Winton Six owners declare this feature the most valuable improvement of recent years.

Every man who recognizes the superiority of electric lighting over candles, oil and gas, will quite as readily recognize the superiority of the Winton Six over other types when he rides in this car.

And the price, too, is right. The 48 horse-power Winton Six sells at $3000. That's at least $1000 less than the same horse-power will cost you in the best known fours—the gas light types of motor car progress.

may be ruined. Can't you see the inequality? Is there any justice in it? There can be no practical difference as far as safety is concerned between a credit liability (checks) and a credit bank-note liability, as they are both payable on demand and have the same security, and for these reasons we claim a bank should be allowed to issue both, and it only remains for us to adopt a proper system.

It is not at all a question of what the bankers want but what commerce demands. Commerce has demanded a credit emergency issue and that demand was answered in the fall of '07 by the issuance of clearing house certificates. The action taken by the clearing houses was not legal and if repeated might involve great evils, and if the same demand be again made on the banks it is needless to say there will be a repetition. Evolution has pointed out the way, namely, credit currency, and the function of our government is not to try to govern the natural laws of supply and demand, but simply to protect the laws of nature, which in this case would be to systematize and institute some form of credit currency that would satisfy the demands.

We would not be trying an experiment as the opposition foolishly claims. Credit currency has been issued in various forms with thorough success, not only abroad, but in this country as well. As to fundamental regulations, we simply need be governed by practical economic principles, and as to detail in system we might copy from existing and historical systems.

It is granted of course in a debate like this, where time is limited, that it is impossible for us to divulge even one system in its smallest detail, and as I will suggest more than one plan that might be followed, detail is the more impossible. Plans that have been proposed are many and each one varies from the other. The American Bankers Association has proposed one, a commercial association in New York another, and Father Aldrich has a new one every time he makes a speech. But if a proper committee, composed of bankers, commercial men and Mr. Aldrich's kind, worked together, there is not the least doubt in my mind that a proper plan could and would be invented.

There are two classes of plans; one proposes note issue by the individual banks, and the other note issue by a central association of all of the banks. In the first case the redemption would be made automatic or voluntary, as in the case of the Suffolk system, and in the second a graduated tax would be necessary to cause speedy redemption, as in the case of Germany and France. It is not my object to argue any one plan, but to show how successfully each plan has worked.

In the case of the Suffolk system, the Suffolk Bank of Boston offered to redeem at par in Boston the notes of each New England bank if it would carry a small balance with the Suffolk Bank and send in the notes to the other banks for redemption. The result was a clearing house for New England bank notes. Each bank redeemed its own notes by depositing the notes of the other banks, the same as we meet checks on us at the clearing house by checks on other clearing house banks. The records show in the year 1855 that the average amount of outstanding notes was about $40,000,000, and that about $400,000,000 in notes were redeemed during that year, or that the entire circulation was redeemed nearly once a month. In the year 1850 the law required a specie reserve against these notes of 15 per cent in Massachusetts, 10 per cent in Maine, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, 7½ in New Hampshire and 6 per cent in Vermont, and with these reserves they redeemed their circulation ten times a year. The Suffolk system was a very great success inasmuch as it provided New England with a good sound and elastic currency at par with gold, and it showed a loss that averaged one-eighth of 1 per cent per annum for a period of thirty years. I do not claim that a system identical with that would work properly to-day, but it illustrated the benefits of a credit currency that might well be copied now.

The best plan in my mind for the issuance of a credit currency is a central institution, and I do not wish you to infer a central bank, because that generally brings to the mind the awful failure of the old United States Bank, and because this central institution as I will show need not be a bank in any sense of the word, but rather an association similar to our clearing house associations.

In a general way this institution to be governed similarly to the Bank of France and the Imperial Bank of Germany.

1. This central association to be made up of all of the national banks of the reserve cities that may wish to join it.

2. Each member bank to hold its pro rata share of stock according to its paid up capital.

3. Each bank to be represented on the board of governors and that board to elect an executive committee.

4. The president to be the secretary of the treasury.

5. The other executive officers to be officials in the treasury department.

6. All business to be passed on by the executive officers on the one hand, and the executive committee of the board of governors on the other. The first mentioned body would protect the welfare of the general public and the second would see to it that the institution was run on sound business principles.

7. Each bank when applying for a credit issue to present 125 per cent of the amount of that issue in commercial paper and 15 per cent in gold as reserve (these amounts might be raised or lowered).

8. The rate of interest to be paid on loan to be fixed by the joint committee, and that rate to be always a little above the rate being paid on the paper deposited. The banks would then redeem their credit issues as fast as the need for it disappeared.

9. If at any time a bank wished to redeem its issue it could deposit with the association an amount of gold equal to the notes still outstanding (this gold to be held dormant till used for the redemption of the notes).

10. Individual banks could at any time be admitted to, or allowed to resign from, or be expelled from the association by the action of the combined committees.

11. This credit currency to be payable in gold and made legal tender by the government.

This plan is outlined but in a general way for most of the detail would have to be evolved. This association could be made valuable in other ways, as, for instance, it could be made a central reserve and abandon our present evil system of reduplication of reserves, but that is off the question.

As my colleague has said, we do not claim that this will create an entire panacea for panics, as other reforms must accompany it. But what would be the effect of this system upon the money market? Suppose, if you please, that our fixed currency has been cut down to the proper level, so that there is at no time a severe redundancy, and the fall of the year approaches and the country needs more money. Then, as there is increased stringency and long before a crisis, the banks, through the association, commence to issue credit currency and are easily able to keep up cash payments. Any man having legitimate trade and therefore good credit, will always be able to convert that credit into legal tender form, and as long as cash may be had public confidence, which is the foundation of credit will remain strong. And so long as confidence and credit remain firm, it will be practically impossible for the failure of one Wall Street speculator to cause riot in finance throughout the entire country.

We have all seen the great need of some form of elastic currency. We have seen the total failure of all bank notes based upon bonds, or other assets not easily convertible into cash, to answer our needs. We have seen other countries, having banks which show more failures than our national banks, adopt credit currency in one form or another with great success. Then why should we, the greatest commercial nation on the globe, continue a system of currency that is the laughing stock of financiers of the world, just because there is always that class of men who fear to tread in any path but that made by his father. I dare say that it will not be long before even the politicians at Washington will see that credit currency has been forced upon us by the natural demands of the laws of nature, and they will then give up a law based purely upon economical principles.

Chicago Chapter Election

There wasn't the least bit of a row of any kind when members of the Chicago Chapter of the American Institute of Banking held their annual meeting last week in the Northwestern University building. Reports showed that the last year had been the most prosperous in the history of the organization and the treasurer reported a balance of $1,600. Lester B. Brady was chosen president; C. R. Wheeler, vice-president; Raymond R. Olson, financial secretary; W. F. Rowe, corresponding secretary; and John F. Yocum, treasurer. All the hard work done for candidates was forgotten and a chapter boom is expected. President Brady is connected with the U. S. sub-treasury, in this city.

Philadelphia Chapter

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather a large proportion of the membership of the Philadelphia Chapter A. I. B. braved the rainstorm and attended the final meeting of the year, which was held Friday evening, May 7th, in the Roger Williams building.

This being election night, the function was celebrated by an informal smoker, and an enjoyable musical program was rendered. Interesting reports were presented by the various committees, the most favorable of which was that of the Membership Committee, whose work for the year shows an increase in membership of 103, and a representation in ninety-eight institutions.

The result of the balloting favored W. S.

Evans of Rufus Waples, Banker, and John C. Knox of the Bank of North America, as delegates to the Seattle convention, while the Board of Governors for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

Frederick Butler, First National Bank.
J. G. Sonneborn, Ninth National Bank.
Frank C. Eves, West Phila. Title & Trust Company.
Eugene J. Morris, Manayunk National Bank.
E. Leslie Allison, Fourth Street National Bank.

J. Norman Ball, Brown Bros. & Co.
J. C. Knox, Bank of North America.

A Tip to House Organs

The Chicago Association of Commerce is to abandon its publication of Chicago Commerce, a weekly paper, and Greater Chicago, a quarterly magazine.

The question had been discussed by members of the executive committee of the association for some time, the general sentiment being that the association should stick to its purpose, "furthering of Chicago's commercial, industrial and social needs," and refrain from entering any field of endeavor that would in any manner compete with local interests. Banks which publish purely house organs, but which compete for general and bank advertising, in competition with daily and financial papers, should take a hint.

Bank Guaranty Passes in Texas

Austin, Texas, May 11.—The Texas legislature adjourned at midnight to-night after having been in session since Jan. 11th. The most notable feature of the concluding session was the passage of a bill for the guaranty of bank deposits. The fight on this bill has been vigorous ever since the legislature assembled and ended to-day only when the senate and house conferees agreed upon the bill, which passed both houses and which, it is said, is satisfactory to the governor.

The directors of the Farmers' and Merchants' State Bank, Neola, Ia., have declared its regular dividend and placed $5,000 to its surplus fund.

Des Moines, May 20.—Iowa bankers are talking politics at the various group meetings these days. The selection of officers for the state association to be elected at the state convention at Waterloo in June affords ample ground for discussion. J. D. Easton of Waterloo, the present treasurer, seems to have a good healthy boom for president. So has John McHugh of Sioux City. J. M. Dinwiddie of Cedar Rapids appears to have a life lease on the secretaryship. There has been no one else mentioned so far as Des Moines bankers know.

It is apparent that the fight will come on the selection of treasurer. D. B. Allen of Arlington had a boom for this job duly launched at the group meeting at Decorah a fortnight ago. He was chairman of Group Four the past year. I. M. Sproull of Washington is also being backed for treasurer and there are rumors that the entries have not closed as yet.

Many New Group Officers

Many new group officers have been elected at meetings held the past ten days. C. R. Carpenter of Fayette was chosen chairman of Group Four, and J. M. Pollard of Strawberry Point was chosen secretary.

A. D. Simmons of Osceola was re-elected chairman of Group Nine which met at Creston, and E. O. Stearns of Van Wert was re-elected secretary.

George W. Coe of Woodbine was elected to lead Group Five at the meeting at Council Bluffs. R. T. Penniston of Defiance was made secretary.

H. A. Gooch of Sioux City was chosen president of Group One which met at Sioux City. W. H. Eddy of Boyden was made secretary.

Makes Prophecy

Congressman Walter I. Smith seems to have been the one most talked about at the meeting of Group Five held in Council Bluffs Thursday, May 13th. After listening to papers declaring postal savings banks and guaranteed deposit laws as unwise, Mr. Smith was introduced. He calmly advised the bankers that both of these things are sure to come. He said the proper thing for bankers to do is to stop fighting them and to join in using their influence to secure the best measures possible along this line. Congressman Smith's subject was "Should Bankers Aid in the Preparation of Postal Saving Bank Bills." He took the position that they should. He paid a glowing tribute to bankers and the good influence they may have on beneficial financial legislation. In his opinion, guaranteed bank deposits will come before the postal savings bank.

Group Five Meeting

The meeting of Group Five was thoroughly successful. Many bankers were on hand. The meeting was called to order by chairman Hunter at 11 o'clock and the banquet was served at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

T. H. H. Read of Shenandoah read a paper on "Postal Savings Banks" that was scholarly and so pleased the bankers that they adopted a resolution that it be sent to the secretary of the American Bankers Association. Mr. Read opposed the plan and showed many excellent reasons why postal savings banks should not be established. Victor E. Bender of the Council Bluffs Nonpareil welcomed the visitors to the city, and Carl F. Kuehnle of Denison responded. President J. T. Brooke of the state association spoke on the benefit of belonging to the state body. Two Omaha bankers, Mr. Eastman and Mr. French, talked briefly upon Nebraska's new deposit guaranty law, and Mr. Kuehnle, L. F. Potter, D. L. Heinsheimer and others discussed the question with zeal.

Group Nine Meeting

The meeting of Group Nine at Creston, on Wednesday, May 12th, was pronounced the best ever held by the bankers who compose that group. Chairman Simmons called things to order at 1:30 in the afternoon. President J. B. Harsh of the Creston National gave the address of welcome. H. D. Copeland of the Chariton National, who was down for response was not on hand, and H. W. Brough of the First National of Chicago was introduced. He read an interesting paper on the value of the banker to the community and the place he fills. A paper prepared by E. B. Gurney of Fremont Neb., on the postal savings bank was read, and Hon. Thomas L. Maxwell was thoroughly at home on law subjects in which bankers are especially interested. The bankers at the conclusion of the program were taken for a sight seeing trip over Creston and the social session in the evening wound up the day.

Meeting of Group Two

Two especially interesting features were on the program for Group Two which met at Fort Dodge Friday, May 21st. One was an address by George E. Roberts of the Commercial National of Chicago on "Banking and Currency Reform." This is Mr. Roberts' old home and he is always at his best in Fort Dodge. The other was an address on "Legislation Against Railroads and its Effect upon General Business Conditions of the Country" by Mr. Donald Ross, assistant to the president of the Illinois Central, Chicago. The program for the morning session consisted of address of welcome by Mayor S. J. Bennett; Response, by G. I. Tremain of the People's State at Humboldt. "Bank Legislation," by State Senator Frederic Larrabee. The lunch at noon was served in Elks' Hall. The day closed with an automobile ride over Fort Dodge.

Other Group Meetings

Two more group meetings are announced. Group Ten met at Ottumwa, Wednesday, May 19th. Group Eight will meet at Clinton, May 27th. Programs will be given next week.

Superintendents Condemn Present Methods

The county superintendents of the Iowa schools in state conference at Des Moines last week served notice upon the bankers of the state who are school treasurers, that there will be something doing towards securing the abolition of this latter job within the coming two years. The bankers are generally credited with defeating the Stillman bill in the recent legislature which would have abolished the office of school treasurer and placed the school funds in the hands of the county treasurer direct. The county superintendents condemn the present method at their conference at

Ask for Pardon

Petitions for the pardon of Carl M. Spencer, the defaulting collecting agent for the Des Moines National, have been started by friends of Spencer and are being generally signed. Spencer was convicted and sentenced to five years in the federal penitentiary. He appealed to the circuit court of appeals which sustained the lower court a fortnight ago. The petition which will be sent to President Taft relates that Spencer is poverty stricken now and that he took the money to use in securing medical treatment for a crippled son. Spencer has never served a day except while in the county jail awaiting a bondsman.

Organize a Security Company

The Greater Des Moines Committee has completed the organization of a remarkable security company. It is known as the Des Moines Industrial Security Company and it has a capitalization of $500,000. The company is organized along the same lines as an ordinary security company. Its object is to furnish money for the establishment of factories in Des Moines, and stockholders expect to realize well from their investment.

Bankers Interested in Harlan Case

Iowa bankers especially are interested in the efforts of J. M. Harlan, president of the First National at Indianola, to secure the pardon of his brother, W. S. Harlan, recently sentenced to serve a penitentiary sentence for peonage in connection with his lumber camp at Lockport, Ala. The Harlan case, which has been featured by newspapers all over the country, has been watched by Iowans where Harlan was formerly a resident. The Indianola banker recently visited President Taft, accompanied by Senators Dolliver and Cummins, and is using all influence at his command to secure his brother's release.

Condition of Des Moines Banks

The abstract of the condition of the national banks of Des Moines as shown at the recent call of the comptroller of the currency shows the average reserve held at 21.15 per cent as against 22.61 per cent Feb. 5th. Loans and discounts increased from $10,369,496 to $11,614,117; gold coin decreased from $422,058 to $363,142; lawful money increased from $1,362,192 to $1,437,950; individual deposits increased from $4,990,092 to $5,654,885.

Attracts Fresh Air Fiends

The Marquardt Savings, Des Moines, is attracting considerable attention from fresh air fiends because of the installation of an "Ozone" air purifier which is claimed to manufacture oxygen and destroy carbon dioxide. Cashier John Hogan and his associates declare that the constant smell of oxygen torments them by suggesting the fishing rod and the golf club.

Lookout Notice

All banks at Waterloo have been warned to keep a lookout for spurious five dollar gold pieces which have been in circulation in that city, supposedly from a source not far removed from the place.

Converted into a National Bank

The Iowa State at Mount Ayr has been converted into the First National of that place. The capital stock is $25,000.

Oscar Casey; F. W. Powers and A. E. Glenney, vice-presidents of the Black Hawk National at Waterloo, succeeding M. A. Bucham and Richard Holmes; C. O. Fatland, assistant cashier of the First National at Cambridge. Edgar John has resigned as cashier of the First National at Nevada. His place will be filled during the summer.

National Bank Application Approved

The application for organization of the First National at Reinbeck has been approved. The capital stock is $50,000. Officers are Ira Rodamar, F. L. Kingsley, W. W. Marsh, J. E. Sedgwick and F. E. Stewart.

To Remove to New Quarters

The Des Moines National has leased the building which it has temporarily occupied during the building of its new structure to the United Cigar Stores Company. It expects to remove to its new quarters June 1st.

Buys Half a Town

K. S. Paulson, a banker at Joice, has caused a sensation in Mason City realty circles by quickly buying up every available site in his own town, which means that he owns about half the town. The realty was held by Mason City speculators.

locked directorate in banks doing business in the same community, I would compel every man who owned bank stock to deposit his stock with the authorities granting the bank its charter, and in addition thereto, collateral or other unquestionable security, to make immediately available his liability in case his bank should fail, and if he was not willing to submit to some form of depositors' guaranty, or provide some kind of insurance for his depositors against loss, I would not let him run a bank at all. I would in every legitimate way discourage by the laying of a graduated tax, the centralization of the country's wealth. Unless in some way this can be done, evil and only evil will result, but why continue in this strain? These problems are like A. B. C.'s to you, work them out, so that the people, not just a few, shall share in the results of your wisdom. I hope that you will long remember this convention and that it will result in good to the city and state and nation, and that out of it as out of other meetings, that you shall hold, will come dominating western financial ideas that shall compel attention and project themselves from ocean to ocean and from lakes to gulf.

Following Mr. Frantz, Secretary Charles L. Engle made an interesting report. The state association has 645 members, more than twice the number boasted by some of the oldest and some of the richest states in the union. The burglar insurance department under Mr. Engle has increased very materially in the past year, having lost very few renewals and gained a very large amount of new business. There are on the books at the present time insurance amounting to approximately $1,250,000.00 that is in force at the present time. The association has paid burglary losses this year as follows:

|---------------------------------------|------------|
| Bank of Canute, Canute, Okla. ....    | $1,371.80 |
| Bank of Pontotoc, Pontotoc, Okla. ... | 422.00     |
| First State Bank, Oktaha, Okla. ....  | 1,887.75   |
| Bank of Coldwater, Okla. ....         | 1,990.19   |

Making a total of .....$5,721.74

Mr. Engle is in receipt of personal letters from the different banks who have had losses with the association this year and in each instance they state that the settlement made was entirely satisfactory and made promptly.

Oklahoma boasts that its insurance company has never yet contested a claim in the state.

Protective features are to receive more attention in the future. Mr. Engle strongly advises against the purchase of cheap or second hand safes as a direct invitation to the burglar. The attendance was quite large and the rather lengthy program as printed in a former number of THE CHICAGO BANKER was fully carried out. Some of the most interesting addresses are printed in full or in part elsewhere in this number.

Bank Topics by Frank Wykoff

The increasing tendency, however, to fiercely struggle for deposits without any discrimination as to the class obtained is reprehensible. It leads the public to believe that all deposits are desirable and eagerly sought for by the banks. All kinds of deposits are not alike desirable—some kinds are undoubtedly undesirable. Deposits procured by reciprocal arrangements fostering the prevalent system of many banks redepositing with one another, contain an element which makes for weakness rather than strength, and leads to rapid shrinkage whenever apprehension induces the strengthening of actual cash reserves.

As a final topic I want to exhort you to go to your work each day with joy and enthusiasm. No great results were ever obtained except by means of joyous and enthusiastic labor. You must get your happiness out of your work if you ever get any real happiness. Happiness does not consist in the acquisition of material things, but rather in the feeling of having done your utmost to give to the world daily the best it was in you to give and then being content with the results. True success is not measured by what we get out of life, but by what we put into it, not by what we have done for ourselves but by what we have done for others, and the only things which we really can keep and which prove of permanent benefit to us are the things we only shared in and passed on to others. The best banker is not essentially a great money maker but rather the conservator of the wealth of others. He enables others to make great fortunes, and often prevents them from losing fortunes after they are made.

And when the mellow years of age have brought for him the hour of retirement from active service, the grateful acknowledgments of his countrymen and the consciousness of having met every crisis manfully, stood every test in the hour of his country's peril, and cheerfully performed every task that fell to his lot with unfailing kindness and uniform fidelity, is the best heritage the banker can hope for here and the best passport he can secure for entrance into the hereafter.

Banking Conditions in Virginia

and readjustment of values as a result of the panic is nearly over and that with the settlement of the tariff the improvement will be more marked. The depression has been confined almost entirely to industrial and commercial lines, the agricultural classes having suffered but little, if any, being blessed by providence with abundant crops which they have been able to dispose of at remunerative prices.

When we consider the fact that 82 per cent of the population of Virginia reside in the country, the greater part of whom are engaged in agriculture, and the immense value of their products, it must be conceded that the farming interest is an important factor in our prosperity. Agriculture has kept abreast of the progress of the age and been able to adapt itself to new conditions. It is no longer a "nigger and a mule" but as the negro laborer on the farm has disappeared it is "mule and machinery." Better farm work is being done in Virginia than ever before. The farmers are reading and studying farm literature, agricultural reports, bulletins, etc., and are making intelligent application of this information in their work. The lands are being improved by rotation of crops and the cultivation of legumes, and a smaller acreage is made to produce larger yields. The commissioner of agriculture in his last bulletin—No. 44—gives a comparative statement of the acreage and value of farm products in Virginia in 1900 and 1908. In 1900 the acreage in cultivation was 4,040,339 and value of crops produced $129,104,000, and in 1908 the acreage was 3,301,500 and value of crops produced $204,000,000. Thus with a reduction of 18 per cent in the acreage in cultivation from 1900 to 1908 there was an increase of 58 per cent in value of crops produced. The value of the corn crop alone in Virginia in that period has increased from $10,300,000 to $30,000,000, or about 200 per cent. This increased prosperity of the farmers is reflected in the number of new banks organized in the small towns and increase in the deposits of country banks. I have thought that perhaps it would be well to review briefly the tendencies of legislation in regard to banks, as this seems to be one of the important questions of the present, and one which will engage your attention at this meeting.

In national currency legislation, since the passage of the Aldrich-Vreeland currency bill, which has the disapproval of the bankers generally of this country, we are awaiting the report of the monetary commission appointed by the last Congress, which went abroad to investigate the monetary systems of the commercial nations of Europe. While they have not yet made any report it is hinted in the press that it will be in favor of a central bank.

The most serious national legislation proposed at this time affecting banks is the postal savings bank bill. Such a measure has been before Congress in various forms for a number of years, but excited little attention nor caused serious alarm. But the matter now assumes a much more formidable aspect from the fact that it was made a part of the platform of the dominant political party and was urged and commended by the incoming president in his inaugural address. It may have been put in the platform for buncombe, merely to catch votes, but I have too high a regard for the character of our President to think that he would make any public utterances that were insincere. This increases our anxiety because we have had many striking examples in the past few years of the influence of the President on legislation.

It is hardly necessary to discuss this measure at length, for so much has been published and so many able addresses delivered on the subject that every well informed banker is familiar with the provisions of the bill and all the arguments in favor of and against it, and anything which I might say would be but a repetition of what you already know. Perhaps no subject will excite greater interest or more discussion during your deliberations than the report of the committee to frame a banking law for the state. This movement had its beginning at the meeting held at Richmond in 1905, at that time I opposed any action on the subject, because under the laws then existing there had been very few failures of state banks, or defalcation among their officers. I also feared that if there were any movement towards legislation on the subject there would be a disposition to conform so nearly to the national bank act that it would greatly impair the usefulness and efficiency of the state banks. The state banks have their own peculiar sphere in our financial system, they are pre-eminently for the country districts and small towns and have contributed largely to the development and building up of the towns of the commonwealth.

My opinions have changed since then and now I strongly favor legislation on the subject. Nor do I think anything has been lost by the delay, as we bring to the task a fuller investigation and more comprehensive grasp of the subject, which will enable us to perfect a bill that will more fully meet the demands of the banking institutions and the public than any bill we might have framed at that time. The matter came up again at your meeting in 1906 and a committee was appointed to draft a bill creating a bureau of banking and providing for the examination of banks, with instructions to report at the next meeting of the association. Various causes prevented this committee from holding a meeting and carrying out the instructions of the association.

At the meeting at Jamestown Exposition in 1907 this committee was continued, with the addition of five more members, with instructions to prepare such a bill and have it presented at the next succeeding session of the Virginia legislature. Thereupon this committee met in Richmond in January 1908 and compared a bill which was offered in both houses of the general assembly, and referred to the proper committees, but lack of time prevented further action. The report of the committee and copy of the bill will be found in the minutes of the last meeting of the association. At your last meeting a new committee was appointed to prepare a banking bill and have the same in tentative form distributed to the members of the association by April 1, 1909, in order that they might have an opportunity of examining it before it came before the association for consideration.

The committee met in Richmond on January 7, 1909, and organized by electing Geo. B. Vest of Newport News, chairman, and proceeded at once to perform the duties entrusted to them. The question arose whether they should draft a bill providing only for the creation of a bureau of banking and the machinery for bank examinations, or should draft a complete code of banking laws for the state, repealing all laws now in force on the subject. After much consideration the latter course was decided on.

Recent unfortunate developments in banking in our state have emphasized the fact that more stringent regulations than exist at present will be required to prevent their recurrence, and many other questions should be dealt with which could not be embraced in a bill simply providing for bank examinations. In fact our present laws on the subject of banking are so meager and fragmentary that Virginia needs a complete, up-to-date, code of banking laws which will meet present conditions and provide for future contingencies.

This bill was sent to the members of the association by April 1, 1909, accompanied by a circular letter requesting a careful examination and inviting such criticism and suggestions as any one might see fit to make. The committee held a subsequent meeting to consider all objections and suggestions in order that the bill when presented to the association might reflect the mind of its members.

If the bill when presented by the committee is such as not to meet with your approval I earnestly hope that you may all co-operate in a harmonious spirit to correct it. The subject cannot be longer deferred. The bankers of the state desire legislation, the people demand it. The next general assembly will take some

Statements of San Francisco Savings Banks

The statements of the San Francisco savings banks sent to the State Bank Commission, show their financial condition at close of business April 28th in deposits of $2,078,655.19 over those of Dec. 21, 1908, the date of the last statement received, and an increase in the resources of $1,361,429.75 between the same dates. This is the first instance in which an increase is noted since the downward tendency commenced, beginning with the stringency which started early in 1907 and continued until the last statement of Dec. 21, 1908. Prior to the stringency of 1907 each successive statement indicated a steady increase in the material wealth of the people, as shown by the growing deposits in the savings banks. The bank commissioners regard the last statement as the surest indication of returning prosperity.

L. A. Goddard

It is believed by many that the late Helge A. Haugan, in the maturity of his judgment, with the foresight and caution of his race, and knowing the uncertainty of life in his own case, provided for, and practically selected, his own successor. He induced L. A. Goddard to come to the State Bank at a time when the casual observer failed to read the motive or the future. On Monday last Mr. Goddard was elected to be Mr. Haugan's successor as president. Henry A. Haugan, son of the late president and formerly assistant cashier of the bank, was elected vice-president, succeeding Mr. Goddard in that position. C. Edward Carlson was elected assistant cashier, succeeding Henry Haugan. H. G. Haugan, comptroller of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul was elected a member of the board to succeed his brother.

The stockholders will hold their special meeting June 8th to vote on the proposition of increasing the bank's capital from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000.

L. A. Goddard came to Chicago in 1892, having been elected cashier of the Fort Dearborn National Bank, coming to the city from Marion, Ill., where he had been a private banker. In 1903 he was elected president of the Fort Dearborn Bank, and for the last year he has been vice-president of the State Bank of Chicago. Mr. Goddard was mayor of Marion for two terms. In the year 1908 he filled the office of president of the Union League Club.

You should Visit Frank Smith

When you do visit Frank Smith, don't do so by calling at the cashier's desk in the big, new Corn Exchange Bank Building, but do it over at the "Frank Smith Norwood Country Club," where he is the Tsar, and "Manny" Nachrach (at other times auditor of the Corn Exchange) is chef, which he says is French for "chief cook and bottle opener." It's a great club, is old in years as such things go in Chicago, and has a social prestige of its own. If you haven't been out you ought to go.

Illinois Convention

The mystery, apparently, has been solved and it is likely that the Illinois state convention will go to Decatur in October, probably between the 12th and the 20th. Decatur has been picked for it and the council favors it, so the details are all that remain.

Group One, Illinois, will meet at Aledo, June 1. The officers are: Chairman, Chas. Boynton, Sheffield; Secretary, S. R. Amlong, Aledo. Group Five, Illinois, will meet at Ottawa, June 23d. This in reality is an adjourned annual meeting from last December at Bloomington, where no election was held, so that one election might occur between state conventions. The officers are: Chairman, F. Lockwood, Kankakee, Secretary, J. M. on, Pontiac.

Two Officers of Kansas Association

W. W. BOWMAN

W. W. PECK
President

Wisconsin Bankers

The Wisconsin association, through its secretary, M. A. Graettinger, is making a laudable attempt to increase the pay of the banking commissioner from $3,000 to $5,000 per year. The state has had one of the ablest commissioners known to the public, and he has been underpaid. The new trust companies bill will add to his duties, when it becomes a law.

New Officers, Group Seven

The Illinois Bankers Association, Group Seven, elected officers for next year as follows: Chairman—S. E. Walker, Decatur.

Secretary-treasurer—J. Roy Miller, Litchfield. Executive committee—W. A. Steele, Sullivan; W. E. Turner, Taylorville; J. E. McDavid, Raymond; H. M. Merriam, Springfield; S. O. Smith, Girard; W. S. Middlesworth, Shelbyville; Walter Pritchett, Niantic.

The next meeting place will be selected by the executive committee at some later date.

Peoria Group Meeting

W. C. White of Peoria was in Chicago this week inviting the bankers to a meeting of Group Two at Peoria, June 9th. Now bankers can go to Group One meeting at Aledo, June 8th, then to Peoria on the 9th and on over to Waterloo, Iowa, for the state convention on June 10th and 11th.

Edward Clifford

When the big, boomer delegation from the Chicago Association of Commerce goes to the Seattle Exposition this season many of the younger business men of the city will be selected to help do the boosting. One of the chief tooters of the Chicago horn will be Edward Clifford, manager for Hornblower & Weeks, bankers and brokers at 152 Monroe Street.

Tracy & Company Fail

Every friend of "Billy" Tracy, and no man had more, will be sorry to learn that his string of brokerage houses had to go into the hands of a receiver showing a shortage in assets of one million dollars. Tracy & Co. had two large offices in Chicago, three in New York, and one in each of five other cities. The causes assigned are the Patten grain boom and the taxicab combination attempted in New York and Chicago. Mr. Tracy is a son of the late Frank W. Tracy of Springfield, this state.

D. J. Hall

While Sol. Sturgis was with A. L. Baker & Co., he noted a promising youngster of twenty-five who seemed to know more about the bond business than any one around the shop. When he organized the new firm of Solomon Sturgis & Co. he invited the young man, D. J. Hall, to come into the firm on his merits.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THE cordon of "Banker" papers is being drawn closer about the loins of the country. Bogus and otherwise, New York still leads the list. Pennsylvania has but one, but then Ohio has three—Finance, Ohio Banker, and Central Banker. The next bunch includes Des Moines, Omaha and Kansas City and Council Bluffs. They are the Northwestern, Western, Southwestern and Confidential. On the coast are the Pacific Banker, and Coast Banker with the Financier of Los Angeles on the side. They are thick in Texas. Texas Banker, Texas Bankers Journal, and the New State Banker, published in Texas but circulated in Oklahoma. Then come Gulf State Banker at New Orleans, and Southern Banker at Birmingham. Some very good things have been overdone.

WE wish all of them success, but do hope that they will not paraphrase our "Mainly About Banks and Bankers" beyond reason. Old and young, they're all at it. They don't seem to get the hang of it, however, in the paragraphs. Truly first class work in this line cannot be done with the scissors nor with a shovel, not even in a practiced hand. Selah!

THE Bank Advertiser looks fine over its Cedar Rapids date line. Many were surprised, recently, at the published portrait of Editor Auracher. They took it for granted that he was a grizzled old veteran of the fatherly advice type. Not at all! Looks like the winsome Sunday-school kid who sits next the teacher "'cause he's good."

THE Hotel Del Monte gave each delegate to the California bankers convention a "Guest Book" telling what to do and what to see at Del Monte, which made an instantaneous hit. Chicago might do something like this in September for the A. B. A. delegates.

NOW comes William Livingstone of Detroit (in the hands of his friends), the most talked of man to succeed F. O. Watts as chairman of the big council. He needs no introduction and mighty little praise. He can do the part without a make up and if any one else has a bee in his bonnet he should coop it up or cause it to get mighty busy.

YES, we'll admit that Henry H. Rogers stood at the head of his class, and that it is a big class.

IF the A. I. B. feels so inclined it can hold its convention in Chicago this year, with practically a full attendance. So efficiently has Geo. A. Jackson made his efforts as chairman of the transportation committee that "everybody will go through Chicago." President Franklin L. Johnson, of St. Louis, will come this way and he gives it as his opinion that "every chapter east of the Mississippi, with the possible exception of New Orleans," will go this way. That's going some. The big Chicago-Seattle special should be a record breaker.

EVERYBODY will be glad to know that the trust companies in Wisconsin have at last received the recognition, at law, to which their standing in the business and banking world entitle them. Oliver C. Fuller, president of the Wisconsin Trust Company, has been a prime mover in the matter, and looks upon the almost unanimous passage of the trust company bill at Madison as an end of the controversy. When the whole matter is boiled down the situation hereafter will be as follows.

BY the terms of the bill trust companies in Wisconsin after January 1, 1909, must pay the same taxes, keep the same reserves (15 per cent), have the same liabilities and the same examinations by the bank commissioner as state banks. They are permitted to receive only time deposits payable at a future date, but not within thirty days, and are prohibited from lending on personal notes or commercial paper. They are forbidden to lend to their officers or employees on any terms whatever. They must deposit securities equal to 50 per cent of their capital but not exceeding $100,000 with the state treasurer as security for trust obligations and must keep their trust funds and property entirely separate and trust accounts in separate books. Likewise they are required to hold and invest all deposits separate from their own funds, and in case of liquidation all investments made from deposits shall be primarily liable and used to pay depositors. They are prohibited from using the word "bank" in their title and must use the word "trust." They will be allowed to have but one office for deposit and are not to establish branches. Stockholders are placed under the same double liability as stockholders in banks and all the restrictions of the state banking law applicable to trust companies are extended to them and some others in addition. On the other hand, trust companies are given the absolute right, heretofore disputed, to receive time deposits and are given broader powers and some advantages over individuals in handling trust estates.

A WORD to secretaries. Many a courtesy is spoiled entirely of its effect by something interjected needlessly into the matter. When you have a group meeting, or a state convention, don't spoil the club invitations of the city where the meeting is held of their nicety by stamping them boldly in large red letters "Good for This Day Only." Let the tickets be so worded that the delegates may know the privileges are for the day of the meeting. Anything else is an imputation upon the guest's good breeding or honesty. That's the way railroads deal with immigrants.

THE Northern Trust Company Bank has sent out its specimen book of travelers' cheques. They are in denominations of from $10 to $100, payable at full value in all parts of the world. They cost ½ of one per cent and can be had of all correspondent banks and many others.

CHARLES W. KNOOP, cashier of the Black Hawk National, Waterloo, Iowa, will give $50 for the best slogan or war cry for his bank. Here's the chance for those correspondence school, publicity men who know so much about bank advertising they can't sleep nights.

P. S. DON'T forget that the Illinois convention will be held at Decatur in October. The convention-going contingent will be glad to finish up in God's country at least.

Banking Conditions in Kansas

The Wichita Convention hears an able annual review by President W. M. Peck of Concordia. Many important issues effectively handled.

Members of the Kansas Bankers Association, Ladies and Gentlemen:

A year ago when you honored me with the highest office in the gift of this association, the organization was just twenty-one years old, and its majority anniversary was celebrated with one of the largest attended and most enthusiastic conventions in its history—an event I shall cherish in memory so long as I live.

To-day, we have again met to discuss and weigh the problems confronting us as an organization and as individuals and it assuredly gives me great pleasure to greet such a vast assembly of bankers and their friends, showing as it does the great concern and interest of all in the solution of the several questions which the Kansas banker, and incidentally through him, the state at large, is now facing. And I wish to congratulate ourselves for the privilege, on an occasion like this, of meeting in the beautiful city of Wichita, well named, the "Queen of the Plains," affording as it does amongst the many other attractions, the opportunity of assembling within the walls of so magnificent a structure as this, the finest, I am told, in the entire West.

Wichita is certainly an ideal convention city, and its citizens and the committee on arrangements have spared no pains to perfect every detail and to make our visit full of pleasure and profit. An interesting and instructive program has been arranged, and it is hoped that this also will prove a source of pleasure and profit to all in attendance.

At the time of our last convention, the country had just recovered from one of the most peculiar and far reaching financial disturbances the people of the United States had ever witnessed, and hardly had our minds been set at rest on that matter until our thoughts and attention were turned toward the then coming presidential election, which in the natural and accepted course of events plays a very important part as a disturbing element in the role of American industrial and financial matters. It is a time when to win, no effort is spared by the political partisan and press, irrespective of the after effects, consequently we have learned to look upon a presidential year as one of much uncertainty and anxiety as affecting our finances.

The Republican national convention was held, nominating Mr. Taft, with the usual discussion as to platform and policies, and was followed by the Democratic convention nominating Mr. Bryan, adopting an extremely radical platform in respect to financial interests; but in spite of all this, business improvement gradually continued, and very fortunately the events of the last campaign were really very insignificant compared with those of many former presidential campaigns, and much to our credit as a nation the past twelve months will go down in history as a period of gradual and unsensational financial recovery and general prosperity.

Such an emphatic change in so short a time has fitly demonstrated the United States a nation of wonderful recuperative power, and the experiences gained during these changes will not soon be forgotten; there is no doubt but that the country, as a whole, is doing business on a more conservative basis and with more care and consideration than at any time in the past number of years, and the spirit of thrift and conservation thus engendered has been of incalculable benefit to all the people of this country.

The election of Mr. Taft in November, and the assurance given that the business interests of the country as well as every enterprise within the laws might proceed without interference from the coming administration, caused a more permanent revival of business activity.

Right here, I will take occasion to say that when President Roosevelt laid aside the cares and responsibilities of his high office on March 4th, one of the most remarkable and interesting chapters in American political history, covering seven eventful years, was very successfully terminated. Not since Lincoln's time has the personal influence and individuality of a chief executive impressed itself upon the country at large with a force and strength like that of Theodore Roosevelt. While his administration was marked to some extent by extreme aggressiveness, his active and perceptive mind shaped him to quickly grasp at all times the things most desired, and his positive ways and determined character brought success to all his undertakings.

It is a well recognized fact that we are now in the midst of a period of phenomenally easy money; the banks throughout the Western states are full of it, and every one has money to spend and is spending it freely. Call money in New York has not reached the 3 per cent mark for more than a year and we now stand stronger, relatively speaking, in the money markets of the world than ever before; but while we as bankers are enjoying our full share of this prosperity, we should never lose sight of the fact that under our financial system, panics and business upheavals are liable to come at any time. We cannot legislate against nor anticipate them in any way, and all that is left us is to fortify the best we can for the shock by being at all times on the alert to see that our loans are judiciously made, and assets well secured. Bankers rarely make mistakes in hard times; it is when prosperity is at the high tide that we should have the lookout posted. Banking interests in general will doubtless realize much to their advantage in the passage of the Aldrich-Vreeland bill, permitting the formation of currency associations where any bank with good sound assets can rely on help to tide over the perilous storms.

For some time, the natural increase in money has been much greater than the per cent of increase in population, and there is no reason to surmise that the output will decrease; on the other hand, there is reason to believe that it will grow greater as time advances. As a result, land has kept advancing in price, and so marvelous has been the development and growth of the country that valuations are now away in advance of anything that even the most sanguine-minded has ever dared forecast. Of course in the natural order of events we will have our fat and our lean years and our ups and our downs, but fair prices for good, productive land have come to stay, and there will be much less fluctuation in the future than we have witnessed in the past. We have no more vast prairies to open for public settlement; population keeps steadily increasing and emigration moving westward, and everyone wants land. The United States has now a population of upwards of 87,000,000, and is predicted by the best authorities that this will be more than double within the next thirty years; if this be true the natural sequence as to land valuations is easily figured out.

Only a little more than a century ago the United States comprised an area of only 827,824 square miles, but the foresight and shrewdness of our old-time statesman, Thomas Jefferson, prompted negotiations for the purchase of the vast territory we now occupy, lying between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains, British America and the Gulf, containing 1,171,931 square miles, thus more than doubling the former area, at a cost of only $15,000,000, or about two cents per acre—and only a little more than double the appropriation made by the recent Kansas legislature. At that time it was a rough and howling wilderness and considered of little value; to-day, figured at the very low average of $20.00 per acre, outside of all improvements, the land is worth $15,000,000,000—certainly the most gigantic real estate deal in the history of the world. And this was only one of the transactions which helped make the United States what she is to-day, and with her territorial expansion, her agricultural wealth still continues to increase. While reports from all over the United States the past year showed no "bumper harvest" as we in Kansas term it, yet crops were generally good and everything the farmer raised brought excellent prices, thereby running the total value of farm products away beyond anything ever known before.

The recent manipulation of the wheat market by professional gamblers is wrong, and a national statute should be enacted to prevent a future attempt to corner any of the food products, rush it to the storage centers and double the price, thus depriving a large class of our citizens of the actual necessities of life. Any possible advantage accruing to the producer through the advance in price is more than counterbalanced by the increased cost of living.

One of the New York papers a short time ago pointed out the fact that the 9's in American history have always been characterized by prosperity, and if tradition holds true and surface indications are correct, 1909 will be a record breaker. This is borne out by a glance at our past. The first panic of any importance, when this bank was founded, Conestoga Wagons were used for conveying families and their household goods from one point to another; the first railroad was not built until 1830. It is now 99 years since The Bank of Pittsburgh was founded, and it has been in continuous existence ever since, uninterrupted by the violent financial disturbances of the past century, and constantly increasing its resources and ability to serve its patrons. It desires to extend its collection facilities and its business with other banks and invites correspondence.

that of 1837, was followed by the great boom of 1839. In 1849 gold was discovered in California, and in '59 the gold mines of Gilpin County, Colorado, which made the city of Denver, were opened. In 1869 the country was blessed with abundant crops, which with the reconstruction measures throughout the Southern states, created a prosperity which has not since been equalled. In 1879 came another readjustment of industrial conditions and great prosperity followed. In 1889 we had the boom that collapsed in '93, and which first called the attention of the country to the possibilities of the great central West. In 1899 occurred the rush to the Klondike gold fields, and the revival of trade after the Spanish-American war and now, the prevailing high prices of farm products and the abundant crop prospects look as if history would again repeat itself in 1909.

At home here, as we look about us to-day and see prosperity on every hand and compare Secretary Coburn's report for the past year with the agricultural reports from the several neighboring states, who is there among us whose bosom will not swell with pride at what Kansas is doing? If I were only sufficiently gifted, nothing could please me more than to dip the pen into the humid colors of the rainbow and describe in glowing terms the magnificent prospect unfolding before us—how Kansas has developed from a wilderness into a land of prosperity and plenty. Containing 80,000 square miles of broad and fertile fields—her rich farms and ranches with 18,472,000 acres under a high state of cultivation producing last year alone, crops amounting to $277,733,000, with flocks and herds valued at $197,510,000; with 11,000 miles of railroads, valued at $356,098,000; with plenty of salt, lead, zinc, oil, natural gas, an inexhaustible supply of cement material, and 4,000 square miles of bituminous coal, and, best of all, with 1,656,000 of prosperous and happy people, all enjoying the fruits of their labor which in a single year rolls up in wealth to nearly five times the annual production of gold in the United States and $75,000,000 more than the estimated output of the entire world; a people typically American in thought and action, who in spite of what anyone else is or thinks, go right ahead with their business of molding public opinion, many years ahead of the rest of the procession, and as was fitly spoken by one of our Kansas senators who said in reply to a slur aimed at the Kansas prohibitory law by another member of the United States senate a few days ago: "I understand how common it is to gibe at Kansas because it has seen fit to write a prohibitory statute into its laws. But on the wind-swept plains of that splendid state, we are bringing up a citizenship that every true American, wherever he hails from, may well be proud to recognize. We are bringing up a generation of men and women who do not know what a saloon looks like, and never want to find out. We are bringing up a race of the clearest headed, the keenest witted, most God-fearing and most patriotic people on the face of the earth, and we are not receiving any assistance from the men in the brewing business either. Kansas has no apologies to make for her attitude on the liquor question."

So marvelous has been her growth and development, and so full of material resources, with a climate stimulative of mental and physical activity, with a population strong, vigorous, inventive and full of enterprise—what her future may be if we continue to raise good crops, requires the wildest stretch of one's most forceful imagination:

"The moonlight falls the softest
And the summer days come ofttest
Out in Kansas.

The sunflowers bloom the brightest
And the breezes whisper lightest
Out in Kansas.

Life's burdens bear the lightest,
Home fires burn the brightest,
Friendships are the strongest,
And love's light glows the longest,
Out in Kansas."

The story of the tremendous wealth of Kansas unfolded to the public by the recent bank statements, both national and state, truly emphasize here constant multiplication of riches. The official call statements show that there is upwards of $185,000,000 on deposit in the 800 state banks, and 210 national banks with large legal reserves. This is certainly a splendid showing with a greater increase of deposits over the former calls than was ever known in the history of the state for the same length of time.

All the world knows that Kansas is rich and much increased with goods, but that alone does not constitute the principal assets of our state. The large bank account is only an incident in the progress of the people. The splendid Kansas spirit manifested in the past while her people were struggling under the financial burden of mortgaged homes and failures in crops, made the state a powerful factor in the nation.

We, as bankers who are custodians of her wealth should advocate proper usage of same for the best interest of all concerned. The state should have more schools and colleges, better laws, better highways, and more of the comforts of life for all its people.

While attending the meeting of Group Four of this association at Manhattan last fall, I was very much impressed with an address on the work and need of the Kansas State Agricultural College delivered by one of its faculty, and with a very pleasant afternoon spent in visiting all of the different departments of the college. This college is a real Kansas institution in every sense of the word. Representing and furthering as it does, the chief interests of the greatest agricultural state in the union, it should be made the greatest school of its kind in the world, from which as a factor in the development of the state at large, we will get big dividends in return. All encouragement should be shown it, both in the way of legislative appropriations and in talking its advantages among our clientage.

Another matter which I believe is the coming issue and of great interest to every man, woman and child in the state of Kansas, is the movement projected by the recent legislature for the improvement of the highways. As this is a matter of public interest every banker should put his shoulder to the wheel and help it along in the real Kansas style of doing things and that, as is well known, is never by halves. A little neighborly talk along the line of good roads will set the people to thinking, and do more for the prosperity of the state than any one thing ever before brought to the minds of the people—nothing will bring the people of the country and towns together like a network of good roads leading out from the principal cities of the state. They will be one of the greatest encouragements to the younger generation to stay on the farm. They will serve to deliver the farm products to market much cheaper and multiply the wealth of the state resources wonderfully.

I had thought to say something at this time in regard to the postal savings bank issue, but the subject will, I am sure, be so ably handled a little later on by Mr. Lucius Teter of Chicago that it would be folly for me to use the time at this point in the program.

Our association having reached its years of discretion, like the young man who leaves home and launches out in business for himself, opened up offices in the Mulvane Bank Building at Topeka, August 1st, with our worthy secretary, Mr. W. W. Bowman, at the helm, giving his whole and undivided time and attention to the association matters. The change has proven a wonderful success. Membership has increased steadily until now we have 1,000 live members.

The burglary insurance and fidelity bond features of the association have increased quite materially, and have demonstrated them-

W. G. Edens At- tends Illinois Group Meetings

The announcement of the Paris, Taylorville and Marion Group meetings last week was sufficient temptation to get W. G. Edens of the Central Trust Company of Illinois started on the convention rounds again, although not fully recovered from the injury he received in January. The pace set by Goddard, Foreman and Rinaman and the other Chicagoans was a little fast, so he was deserted at Taylorville and accompanied the Springfield bankers to their quiet home town on the banks of the Sangamon. Finding the legislature and the State Historical Society and the Elks' State Grand Lodge in session, Edens decided to take to the Historical Society as the proper place for his rest cure. He tells the story that a talented literary lady from Chicago read a paper occupying an hour and a half in time, concerning "The Great Snow of 1831," and just as the paper was finished one of the visiting Elks' bands on a serenading trip to the members of the legislature meeting in the Capitol Building, struck up "There Will be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

From Springfield, Edens traveled to Peoria, where he assisted in the dedication of a new Pythian Castle Hall in that city, being a member of the Supreme Lodge of that order and wound up the week with a call on La Salle and Ottawa banks on Saturday, joining the members of the Hamilton Club and their ladies on the return trip Saturday evening from a day spent at Starved Rock.

Moline Trust and Savings Bank

The Moline Trust and Savings Bank of Moline, (Ill.) celebrated its fortieth anniversary May 18th. The bank was decorated with bunting and flags and cut flowers. As a remembrance of the occasion the bank gave away souvenir automatic indelible pencils which were appreciated by all. In gilt letters the following is printed on the pencil, "Moline Trust and Savings Bank—1869—40th Anniversary, May 18, 1909."

This bank is one of the most prosperous ones in the county. It was organized May 18, 1869, a special charter being granted by Illinois. It was the only bank organized under this act in the county and the savings banks in those days were few and far between. The bank was organized with S. W. Wheelock as president, John Good, vice-president, and the trustees were S. W. Wheelock, H. W. Candee, C. H. Stoddard, John Good, Porter Skinner, Nelson Chester, C. G. Grantz and A. S. Wright.

The Moline Trust and Savings Bank to-day has 7,000 savings accounts aggregating $1,500,000. The capital stock is $150,000 with a surplus and profits of $14,000. The bank was organized as the Moline Savings Bank May 18, 1869.

In 1891 the bank was reorganized under the new savings law and took the name of the Moline State Savings Bank and in 1903 the name was again changed to the Moline Trust and Savings Bank. O. F. Anderson has been with the bank since 1891, being made cashier 1901. Under his direction the bank has become one of the strongest in Moline.

Short, Stanton & Company

Chicago has a brand new bond house, established, too, by men of experience. Short, Stanton & Co. began to do business in the First National Bank Building as early as last November, but are preparing now to push for recognition. The manager, J. J. English, formerly was with Babcock, Rushton & Co., while Mr. Stanton comes from the famous house of Kleybotte in Cincinnati. Their offerings will be of good size and of high quality and of the bankable type.

Five Per Cent Dividend

The directors of the Farmers' National Bank of Springfield, Ill., declared a semiannual dividend of 5 per cent to the stockholders. This is the first time the bank has declared a 5 per cent semiannual dividend, and the stockholders are feeling very happy over it. The bank since its organization in 1882 has declared 4 per cent dividends twice a year.

Group Four, Illinois

Group Four, Illinois will meet at Elgin June 2d and a good program has been sent out by Colin S. Campbell, secretary. Comrade Wilson H. Doe will welcome the visitors and W. G. Edens of Chicago, will respond. Chairman George Woodruff, Joliet, will read a short essay and there will be informal talks by Oscar G. Foreman, E. E. Crabtree and R. L. Rinaman.

Lucius Teter, the missionary for the A. B. A. on postal banks, will conduct a revival meeting in the afternoon, assisted in short talks by Charles N. Stevens, Otto J. Gondolf and William George. Guests will be entertained at a luncheon at 1 p. m., and another at 5:30 p. m. There will be a trip to the famous watch factory, an automobile ride and a river trip. The sessions will be held at the Elks club. Many Chicagoans will go out in automobiles, the distance being but 30 miles and the roads the best in the state.

Banking Conditions in Tennessee

President I. B. Tigrett delivers an able paper at the Chattanooga Convention, taking presidential addresses entirely out of the routine.

An established custom makes it incumbent for the president of this association to present at this annual convening such views for your consideration as are deemed by him of most vital importance to your continued progress and welfare. From this custom I purpose no departure to-day even though the nature of these thoughts may differ from those able addresses to which you have listened in other years.

Not to the importance of more currency legislation, nor to the question of guaranteeing bank deposits; not to the postal savings bank scheme, nor to the state regulation of banks; not to the revision of the tariff measure, nor to our immigration laws do I direct your attention at this time, although I believe you are interested in all these subjects.

My plea to-day, my fellow bankers, is that your determined efforts be given towards creating a higher standard of civic patriotism than that embodied in the narrow, long used and unduly tolerated idea: "My party, may it ever be right, but my party right or wrong." That your determined efforts be given towards eliminating the rampant factionalism which is so seriously impeding the economic advance of this commonwealth; and that we solemnly resolve that material, civic, educational, and moral development shall not longer be lost sight of, and forgotten in the maze of less noble ambitions.

This plea is founded on the idea that this state's or any other state's greatness is dependent on individual excellence and not on legislative enactments; on the kind of man it produces, on the quality of souls it manufactures, and not upon the strength of political machines. And this plea is made to you because of my belief that there is no broader, stronger, or more influential body of men in this state than its bankers;—broad, strong and influential not by any means because they happen to control one hundred and fifty million dollars, but rather because the people of Tennessee unprotected by legal safeguards have emphasized character and ability in the selection of men to govern their banks:—rather because the bankers of Tennessee are men who believe that there is "a higher law than the constitution," and who with Byron affirm, that

"Whatever creed be taught, or land be trod Man's conscience is the oracle of God."

In the heritage of states we are among the most fortunate. God has most graciously endowed Tennessee with inexhaustible resources, and has allowed the charms of nature to abound plenteously over the forty-two thousand square miles embraced within her borders. For the development of this allotment of a great nation's territory we and our forefathers have one hundred and twenty-five years of history to account for, and while we may be able to find errors of omission, yet of the deeds of commission, which her history records neither haughty New England, nor valorous Virginia can speak lightly.

We have more than mere state pride to support us when we dwell on Tennessee's part in the making of the nation; for before the federation of the thirteen states, before the declaration of independence, before the difficult problem of self-government had been undertaken elsewhere on this continent, there was established on Tennessee soil a free and independent community, and under the leadership of John Sevier and James Robertson this first American Commonwealth, dispensing justice after its own manner and bidding defiance to all foes, outlined the nation's work. Nor did she feel that her responsibility for the new nation had ceased with this, for when defeat after defeat had driven American hopes into despair bordering upon surrender, the battle of King's Mountain was fought and there Sevier and Robertson and Shelby with their band of Tennessee pioneers went up from the valley beneath and wrested the crest of the mountain from the indomitable Ferguson and his British. And so stimulating was the effect of this signal triumph following a long series of disasters that many historians have hailed King's Mountain as the turning point of the Revolution.

Indeed, my fellow Tennesseans, if a state's future were dependent solely upon heroic feats of arms the grandeur of the past would doubtless make our own secure. In the second war with the British, Andrew Jackson, the Tennessean, with his Tennessee army won the most complete land victory ever recorded in history when he routed Pakenham and his veterans of the Napoleon wars at the Battle of New Orleans.

In 1847, in the war with Mexico, requisition was made on Tennessee for twenty-eight hundred men, and she then became the old "Volunteer State" when she offered thirty thousand and in addition thereto furnished the hero of the Alamo—Houston.

And in that memorable conflict of the sixties, from which we are told a new South has sprung, Tennessee with a hesitancy born of fraternal love was the last state to secede; then she gave Admiral Farragut and thirty-one thousand troops to the North, and the intrepid Forrest and one hundred and fifteen thousand soldiers to the South.

And it may be true that a new South has since been constructed, but let us not forget that the building was planned and executed by the same architects with the same traditions which had made the old South great,—architects indeed who were sent to their task with naught to build on save the determination and courage and cheer which the union of Puritan and Cavalier had infused into their hearts and which the Omnipresent Providence had fostered.

Patriotism, my fellow bankers, is not a relic to be laid aside when the war clouds no longer hover. That Tennessean who came back to a devastated home bereft by the ravages of war of family and neighbors, who alone in his obscurity set to work to rebuild the ruins with no hope of reward save the joy of achievement, and the benefit which would come to posterity, is no less a patriot than the hero of the Merri-mac. No less a hero than he who withstood the hardships of Valley Forge was that man Spencer, who in 1778 deserted by all his companions and assuming the risk of a lonely death by disease or murder by the Indians, remained in the wilderness of middle Tennessee and became the pioneer settler of Davidson county simply that civilization and the dominion of the white man of Tennessee might be broadened.

Patriots in peace are as vital to a nation's greatness as patriots in war, and he who allows selfish emotions to sway his public duty can be no patriot. He who allows blind prejudice to make him regard the political fortune of some leader as of prime importance; who would willingly violate a law distasteful to his faction; who submerged in partisanship forgets his citizenship and unconcernedly sees a great state lag behind in the enforcement of laws, in the development of its material resources, in the advancement of education, while its power in the nation's council steadily wanes, need not expect a present or a future generation to ascribe to him any patriotic instincts.

This state to-day needs men,—strong and courageous and obedient. Strong in conceiving wise laws and measures, courageous in upholding and proclaiming them, yet obedient to the dictates of a final tribunal even as Socrates was obedient when he would make no effort to evade his country's unjust law, although his life was the forfeit of his obedience.

And we need to remember just now that we are not suffering from a lack of lawmakers, so much as from a lack of statesmen. We have always been too ready to resort to legislation as a cure for every evil. A panic has recently spent a few days in our midst,—a rather costly and unwelcome affliction, but not nearly so costly and unwelcome and unwholesome as the various remedies which our legislature proposed to administer,—remedies especially useless since the patient had already recovered without treatment. A bit of history may tend to show a statesman's value at such a time.

In 1819, and for some time prior thereto, Tennessee was not in a prosperous financial condition. The general stringency over the country accentuated by her heavy debt and small capital produced an exceeding scarcity of the circulating medium in this state. Then came our lawmakers to the rescue. Under Governor McMinn's advice the famous "loan office" bill was passed which proposed the issuance of one million dollars of certificates which should be put in circulation, "based on the credit of the borrowers and warranted by the state on the proceeds of the sale of some public lands." This million dollars was to circulate and make everybody rich. Loan offices were established in every county. It is hardly necessary to say that this chimerical scheme did not work. Hugh L. up at Knoxville had continued right along during the panicky period to pay in specie, as did some others.

Governor McMinn was shortly afterward succeeded by that practical statesman, Governor Carroll. In his first message he urged that the various laws employed as artificial stimulants be put aside, and that instead economy and industry be practiced. To members of the legislature he suggested that instead of issuing paper money they advise their constituents to manufacture their own clothes and live within their means, and not go in debt. To the members themselves he suggested that they all appear in clothing entirely of domestic manufacture. In a message a year or two later he says, "I am happy to say that the pecuniary embarrassments have been greatly diminished by the industry of our citizens and the surplus produce of last year."

Men of the Carroll type Tennessee wants to-day if the poet's vision is to be realized, and "The thoughts of men are to be broadened with the process of the sun." Let us, my fellow bankers, resolve that her progress shall not be stayed. Let us resolve to remember that we are responsible for her present history, and meet our problems and perils so bravely that the next generation shall regard us as giants, not pygmies. Let us as Tennesseans aspire to nobility remembering that "The noble does noble deeds." Let us as bankers avoid the narrow sphere of living simply unto ourselves remembering that "The gates are shut to him who comes alone."

The man of us who is fortunate enough to be a country banker has a special field for patriotic accomplishments. Living as he does in closer communion with patrons and clients, his personality is the more influential, and his opportunity to mould sentiment the greater.

Usually the country banker is one who with the law of Sinai as his legal adviser, and the Sermon on the Mount as his counting room guide, holds to John Milton's standard of living that, "There is nothing that makes men rich and strong but that which they carry inside of them." Some one has spoken this tribute, which has sometimes come to me when thinking of the life and work of some country banker,—"Not all men are of equal value. Not many Platos: only one to whom a thousand lesser minds look up and learn to think. Not many Dantes: one, and a thousand poets tune their harps to his and repeat his notes. Not many Raphaels: one, and no second, but a thousand lesser artists looking up to him are lifted to his level. Not many loyal hearts—great magazines of kindness. Happy the town blessed with a few great minds and a few great hearts. One such citizen will civilize an entire community."

If any man among us has complained of his lot as a country banker because he thought himself possessed of unusual talents which must remain dormant let him remember the words of Emerson,—"If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods the world will make a beaten path to his door."

Tennessee's future value to the nation is dependent not upon the length and breadth of her dominion, nor to the dominance of any party or faction. The responsibility rests solely upon the individual worth of the manhood within her borders, and more especially is she dependent upon her bankers.

With no greater ambition to satisfy than to be an honest and capable banker an effort to determine my own sphere of duty and activity has produced these thoughts.

I was born in Tennessee. I have always lived within her borders, and believing as I do that earth holds no more divinely guarded spot I trust I shall never wander from her confines except as the inquiring traveler whose steps soon turn home.

The New Orleans Meeting

The tri-state convention was not so large, as expected in the way of attendance. There had been a continuous performance for nearly a week in the adjoining territory and even the "regulars" were tired of being "entertained." Too many addresses of welcome, too many smokers, boat rides, too many automobile tours had surfeited the bankers. The New Orleans clearing house did the matchless in the way of hospitality and every act was an endorsement of Southern hospitality—always at par. The foolish daily papers gave every loyal A. B. A. man a case of cold feet by proclaiming the convention a forerunner of a big Southern States Bankers Association to be organized. Nothing else was needed to chill the ardor of the attendants and nothing was farther from the facts. The three states mentioned are loyal to the great A. B. A., and no one need be disturbed about the matter.

Arthur Reynolds Before the Kansas Bankers

Wichita, Kan., May 26.—President Arthur Reynolds, of the Des Moines (Ia.) National, and a member of the currency commission, had an interested audience before him to-day at the Kansas bankers convention. He spoke on aids to the solution of our financial problem, and held his listeners to the end. He said, in part:

At the present time the postal savings bank and guaranty of bank deposits seem to me to be outside of the purposes for which state or federal governments were organized, and in principle are fundamentally wrong.

To me it is not so much a question of the bearing of either of these upon the banks generally as upon the depositing public. I believe this demand for protection through a postal savings bank comes very largely through the inability of the laboring classes to discern between banks, and small losses have ensued. Protection can be given to the depositor through a different channel—that of state and federal supervision of banks—which is a function entirely proper to exercise.

It certainly should not be contended that the commercial deposits of a bank should be protected. Many of these deposits are created through loans made by the bank to its customers. Usually the loan is granted without any other security than the name of the maker, that is, it is usually made without collateral security; this being particularly true in smaller places. Lost commercial accounts are at times borrowed from the bank. In point of equity, the depositor should not receive more protection than he has given to the bank. In a word, he must be expected to trust the bank to the extent the bank trusts him, hence, he cannot expect or ask for special protection to his deposit. It is incredible that such depositors should seek protection.

Savings Departments in National Banks

In December last, as chairman of the federal legislative committee of the American Bankers Association, I presented to the monetary commission of Congress a method which it seems to me will accomplish the desired result, without injecting into our financial system features novel in form and of questionable efficacy, such as have heretofore been tried and have proven unsuccessful. I suggested that national banks (they being the only banks under the supervision of the general government) be permitted to establish savings departments, segregating the assets and limiting the investment to the highest grade securities known, such assets to be held at all times for the protection of such deposits.

This would afford the protection now accorded to deposits in mutual savings banks in New York and the New England states. These banks have been a bulwark for the workingman and a boon to the country.

If savings deposits were protected in this manner, and it must be admitted that the savings of the laborer are very largely placed in savings accounts, I believe that but very little would be heard of the postal savings bank, and this plan of handling savings accounts affords to me a solution of this vexing question along lines fundamentally correct. The laborer should be protected, and the banker can afford perfect protection in the ordinary course of his business.

The Aldrich-Vreeland Measure

It is admitted we must have a law which will go farther than the compromise high taxed emergency currency provided in the Aldrich-Vreeland bill, which became a law a year ago. This has been accepted as a makeshift, unscientific and inoperative. Banks do not carry state, county, and municipal bonds; cannot afford to do so for the purpose of a contingency which may never arise, neither are they taking advantage of the privilege of establishing national clearing houses, in which to segregate assets against which to issue currency, a cumbersome, roundabout, and expensive method of securing notes.

There should be no connection between the banking business and the price of bonds. To issue notes secured by bonds will cripple the lending power of banks in that a premium above the principal will be tied up, particularly if the bonds are purchased as they probably would be in times of stress. In addition there is the question of the safety of an issue of notes on a deposit of bonds. The free banks of issues of 1852 of Indiana were all secured by bonds. These banks all failed in 1857 and the loss to the holders of this “bond-secured” currency was very great. It seems to me unwise and dangerous to disregard the fundamental principle and time-honored practice of national banks, of keeping their assets as liquid as possible through short-time loans, and this, no doubt, in a measure, accounts for banks not having availed themselves of the new law. They should not.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Group bankers' conventions in Minnesota the past week have been stirring up interesting matters. One of these is to advertise the state's advantages and the opportunities for settlers to make themselves well off by farming land in the state. The plan is to have the various groups hire men to create publicity about the individual districts and thus induce settlers to come to the state.

At the Seventh Group meeting in Marshall it was suggested also that convict labor be utilized to make drain tile for the farmers. George Welch, immigration agent at St. Paul, made an address at the meeting and brought out the idea. Although the bankers made no vote on the subject they agreed that drainage was one of the things necessary to improve the farms, and that in the southern portion the value increase would be 33 per cent.

One hundred bankers attended the Marshall meeting, including state association officials and Twin City bank representatives. Secretary C. R. Frost, Cashier George F. Orde of the First National, Cashier Von der Weyer, of the National German American, and M. J. Dowling of Olivia were among the banker-speakers. Mr. Orde on his return said: "There was considerable talk of the activities of other sections of the country in advertising their advantages and it was agreed that Minnesota had many superior advantages to offer these sections that should be more generally known. At the state convention next month an effort will be made to inaugurate a definite campaign to set forth the agricultural possibilities of Minnesota."

At the meeting of the Second Group at Sleepy Eye with 100 bankers on hand the subject was taken up again. State Treasurer C. C. Dinehart, who is a banker, was a speaker. Officers were elected as follows: President, A. B. Cheadle of Jackson; vice-president, P. M. Serrurier of Holland; secretary-treasurer, John S. Tolveron of Fulda; executive committee members, W. D. Willard of Mankato and A. L. Ward of Fairmont.

On his return Secretary C. R. Frost said: "Bankers of the state have awakened to the fact that it is not enough for them to know that Minnesota lands are better than those from Texas to Canada that are advertised so freely in our state. The farmers who till the land must know it, and the thousands of investors in other states must be made to know it."

"To aid immigration and prevent an exodus to other fields, the bankers aim to create a standing agricultural committee of the state association which will act as a sort of clearing house of information bearing on land values and the adaptability of lands to different crops."

"It was suggested at Sleepy Eye that each of the groups of the association in the nine congressional districts of the state, appoint a committee for its particular territory and engage a man to give his whole time to the work of gathering statistics of the agricultural possibilities of his section and give them publicity. It is a big movement and should lead to big results."

Increases Capital and Surplus

The Metropolitan State Bank has increased its capital from $100,000 to $200,000 and its surplus from $15,000 to $30,000. On July 1 the bank will be made a national institution. President V. H. Van Slyke, in making the announcement last week said: "This is the second anniversary of the establishment of the bank, and we celebrate it not only by doubling our stock, but by paying our stockholders their dividend of 9 per cent. The change made solely on account of increased business and in accord with our original plans. We have made application to the comptroller for the currency to be converted to a national bank, and as soon as arrangements are completed the changes will be made. This will be about July 1st." The name "Metropolitan National Bank" has been reserved for the institution. The assets of the bank are $700,000.

his accomplishments, or activities, having been elected director in the Pioneer Press company, which has been bought by the Dispatch, recently acquired by C. H. Grasty of Baltimore. Bankers of St. Paul indorse the move. Judge J. W. ## Denied Retrial

A. Z. Drew, professor-banker, who has been sentenced to two years for receiving a deposit in the Hamline bank when he knew that the institution was insolvent, has been denied a retrial and will appeal to the supreme court of the state. Mayor D. W. Lawler of St. Paul, was of Mr. Drew's counsel. Mr. Drew was professor in Hamline university at St. Paul while operating his bank. He said to an interviewer for the public press that no matter what the verdict of any jury might be his conscience was free from feeling of guilt. He had no hue and cry to make, but was a victim of circumstances. When he was asked if as a rule men in high places were convicted for wrong doing less frequently than ordinary felons, he said:

"That is popular delusion advanced by persons antagonistic toward moneyed interests merely because they are moneyed interests. If you will look up statistics you will find that there is a greater percentage of bankers convicted than there is of burglars."

Complete Organization of Bank

Organization of a bank for Mott, the seat of Hettinger county, N. D., has been completed in Minneapolis. D. H. Beecher, of Grand Forks, N. D., and G. E. Towle, of Minneapolis, and associates, have applied for articles of incorporation. The Atlas State Bank of Tripp, S. D., has been formed with $5,000 capital by Fred Worcester, Charles Worcester, Ireton, Iowa; George Worcester, Dallas; H. F. Slaughter, Gregory. MacKay Brothers, of Madison, S. D., have incorporated also at $30,000. They are W. A. MacKay, D. F. MacKay and M. F. MacKay. The Wood County National Bank of Grand Rapids, Wis., has let the contract for a $60,000 bank building.

First National

The First National of Lead, S. D., issues a statement which shows the thrift of Homestake miners. The deposits are now more than $1,000,000. The assets and deposits are beyond the record mark for the bank.

Approves Banking Legislation

C. D. Griffith, of Sleepy Eye, president of the First National, and head of the movement to establish a bankers' state bank in Minneapolis, approves of the banking legislation just finished. He said: "It is a matter for congratulation among the bankers of the state that the legislature passed such excellent laws relating to the banking business. Never before had any Minnesota legislature enacted so much wise and helpful banking legislation. All of the banking legislation at the last session was progressive."

"The act creating a department of banking and a superintendent of banks separate from the public examiner's office was a forward step and the new department will serve a very useful purpose."

"The act providing that the public examiner shall take charge of the liquidation and distribution of the assets of delinquent and insolvent banks is a guaranty that interested stockholders and depositors will get equitable shares of the available assets in such cases."

"Another beneficial act is that making it a felony for a man to falsify in a statement of his financial responsibility. The framing and passage of such legislation was constructive legislation."

Advance Dividend Rates

At the last quarterly meeting of the directors of the Minneapolis Trust Company, which was the end of the half year, they advanced the dividend rate from 6 to 8 per cent and declared a semiannual dividend of 4 per cent.

Opening of Scandinavian American National

In the first twenty minutes after the Scandinavian American National Bank opened its doors at Minneapolis on May 19th one hundred customers had presented themselves. The bank is doing business in the building formerly occupied by the Swedish American National, before its absorption by the Northwestern National, and where the Swedish American National has been doing business for several months. N. O. Werner, president of the Swedish American National, received the visitors at the bank as president of the new institution also. With the opening of the Scandinavian American National, the People's Bank goes out of business. C. L. Grandin, president of that bank, and C. E. Cotton, the cashier, are vice-presidents of the new institution. Knute Ekman, formerly assistant cashier of the Swedish American National, is cashier of the new bank. As the People's brought its patronage to the new institution, it starts with 650 accounts and deposits of more than $520,000. New deposits to the amount of $25,000 were received in the first ten minutes after opening. The capital of the Scandinavian American National is $250,000. Of the sixteen commercial banks remaining in Minneapolis the Scandinavian American is the fifth national. The Metropolitan State will be the sixth when it seeks its national charter in the near future.

G. F. Orde Returned

George F. Orde, cashier of the First National of Minneapolis, has returned from a visit to Hot Springs, Virginia, and New York. His smiling face shows that some time was spent on the golf links. Mr. Orde is sun browned and has several weeks start on his golfing confreres in the Twin Cities who have been kept indoors by the unseasonably cool weather in Minnesota.

Procuring Credit by Fraudulent Statements

In all states there is a movement on to have bills passed to punish the individual who secures bank credits by making fraudulent or misleading statements, whether for individual or corporate use. This has had the able backing of the legal department of the A. B. A. At Springfield, Illinois, such a bill has passed the lower house with excellent chances of becoming a law. The present law has been construed to be inoperative as to the member or officer of a firm or corporation who misrepresents the assets of that firm or corporation and thereby defrauds persons or institutions extending credit on the representations made them. All the individual had to do was to incorporate himself, his bookkeeper, and his stenographer and go ahead. As the agent for the corporation he was an immune crook, if he wished to be. It is provided in the measure as passed by the house that any person who makes misrepresentation knowingly of his assets and liabilities, or of those of a firm or corporation of which he is a member or officer, in writing and signed by himself, and thereby obtains credit for himself or for such firm or corporation and defrauds any person of money, shall be liable to a fine of $2,000 and imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, and shall be sentenced to return the money fraudulently obtained if it can be done.

Originally the new measure proposed to hold agents and employees responsible, as well as members and officers of firms and corporations, but the opposition produced by the effort to include them was so great that they were eliminated. Originally it was intended to increase the jail sentence to ten years, but when the bill was on second reading it was thought best to reduce it to one year. The talk by which the present bill was modified into a veritable joker was that it would be unfair to punish the mere employee of a corporation for signing a false statement when he had to sign it or lose his job. That sounded good but it was dangerous doctrine. It has kept many a crook out of Joliet. Now, it is hoped that the bill can go forward to the governor and that he will sign without delay. Every bank and every honest borrower needs just such protection.

The National Bank Examination System

The day of the national bank examiner who does other things "on the side" is so nearly done that ere long it will have been forgotten. The new head of the comptroller's office is human, as others have been, but he is not of the type who have looked upon the place merely as a stepping stone to something better. Such were afraid to create revolutions in methods lest his own chances might be hurt by trading upon the interests of some institution with a probable vacancy. Mr. Murray, when he went to the helm of things, started with the bank examiners. He required them to take an oath of office, something they never had done before. Then he insisted they should be placed under bond of $20,000 each. In order that they might be removed from temptation he ordered all examiners to pay any loans they had made with national banks, to resign from corporations which borrow from banks, and to enter into an agreement that they would not borrow money from banks themselves, nor own any bank stock nor be an officer of any corporation likely to seek bank accommodation, nor engage in any kind of business whatsoever while holding office as examiners. In other words, he requires these men to devote all their time and all their energies to government business instead of making it, as in a number of instances in the past, a side line. Having acted in a way calculated to insure the integrity of the individual, Mr. Murray took steps to organize the bank examiners of the country into an independent force. He distributed the states among twelve districts, made the best examiners chairmen, and ordered the examiners in each district to hold two meetings annually for the purpose of discussing methods of examination, the condition of banks, undesirable borrowers, and the size of loans made.

Most of this is history now, but much of it that is good will be engrafted upon the routine of the office for all time. Such is the nature of governmental custom. The national and state examiners will henceforth co-operate and that in a measure is the result of Mr. Murray's initiative. It is said, also, that he has a "doubtful list" of banks that will be examined at short intervals or until their directors can be induced to "pay attention" to their end of the job. Good, hot letters will be sent out in lieu of the harmless formalities of the past which might have been described as "circulars." Now, Mr. Murray, if you can help the banks escape from the Elmer Dover sort of political examiners, you will be entitled to a clean balance sheet. He is said to be slated for the important post at New York, with nothing but political experience as a qualification.

Bank Publicity Strictly Necessary

It is at the group meeting where the ideas

advanced seem to come more directly from experience to be more practical and less theoretical. This decreases on the way up to the big A. B. A. conventions where those who talk most are not practical but theoretical in their ideas. A few thoughts by S. F. McConnell, of Bloomfield, at the Ottumwa, Iowa group meeting, struck at the vitals of many perplexing questions. He believes that publicity answers most of the clamors against banking and brings it friends and increases confidence. He believes that "bank advertising in its best sense is making known to the public the quality of service that a bank is able to give and does give to the community. Without being wholly conscious of the fact the banker to-day has come to accept the placing of his business in the catalogue of public institution and if he be 'wise in his day and generation' devotes his advertising to familiarizing his public with the relation of the bank to the financial life of the community. The more knowledge our people acquire of the methods, responsibilities and service of a really good bank, the higher it will stand in the estimation of its patrons."

Mr. McConnell holds that "if we would undertake to estimate the number of fairly intelligent people who do not know that the capital of a bank is a guaranty fund advanced to its stockholders to insure the depositor against loss, through crimes or mistakes of judgment we would not be surprised at the popularity of government guaranty of deposits. If only the public knew that this capital paid in cash by stockholders must remain intact, that it must be and is replenished when drawn upon to cover losses, and that its chief purpose is the protection of the depositor, that knowledge would be a most potent factor in establishing and maintaining confidence in banks." He thinks that the newspaper discussion of banking questions makes it easier for banks to obtain known capital, banks properly supervised and inspected, and which publish statements, to get business. He doesn't believe in the other kind of banking, the kind which is dying out.

A New Group Meeting Plan

The bankers of Ottumwa have received a vote of confidence from their fellow members of Group Ten that may help revolutionize some features of the group system of holding meetings. The Group Ten, Iowa, bankers passed a resolution to hold all future meetings in Ottumwa upon February 12th of each year. The old officers were re-elected, and there was talk of making L. E. Stevens chairman for life.

The idea of making Lincoln's birthday the day of annual meeting is likely to spread. The idea of meeting in the logical meeting place, the largest central city, each year, is likely to follow suit. System and convenience are to be absolute banker traits of character.

To Erect an Eight-story Building

A. L. Hawley, president of the Trustee Securities Company of New York, announced that the Trustee company of Spokane, of which Harry L. Flood is president, will erect an eight-story business building here next winter, after which a building will be added to the company's holdings every eight or nine months. Mr. Hawley said that the development of the Northwest in general and Spokane in particular will be more rapid in the next few years than at any point in its history for the reason that the United States has changed from a debtor to a creditor nation and the large amount of eastern surplus cash is looking to the wealthy, resourceful and undeveloped districts of the West for investment.

Founder of Washington National Dead

Colonel Henry L. Tilton of Littleton, N. H., who died at Pasadena, Cal., 10 days ago, was founder of the Washington National Bank in Spokane organized in the fall of 1889, which occupied the present site of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company's home. When the panic in 1893 came the bank failed and Colonel Tilton returned to New Hampshire. He came to Spokane in the spring of 1887, associating himself with I. S. Kaufman in the real estate business. They built the old Granite block in 1888, and after the fire in 1889 they erected the new Granite building at Washington Street and Riverside Avenue. He was also connected with the firm of Stocker, Frye & Tilton, which carried on extensive realty projects.

Professional Forger Caught

C. P. Elliott, who is in custody here charged with passing forged checks, is believed by the police to be a professional. Among his effects were found a number of checks drawn in favor of various persons in the same hand as that with which the one passed on the grocer was written, and a check book of the Tootle-Lemon bank of St. Joseph, Mo., containing several checks filled out for various amounts. Another check was drawn on the Market Street Bank of San Francisco. Among his papers were letters from five women in as many different parts of the country, in each of which he is addressed as husband. There is also a summons directing him to appear in a California court and answer to the divorce complaint filed by his wife in that state.

Counterfeiters Sentenced

George Barton and Jack Alton, convicted by a jury in the United States court here on indictments for counterfeiting were sentenced by Judge Edward Whitson to six months in the county jail and to pay fines of $100. The chief witness against them was Loren Breeding, who confessed that he had passed the coins which had been furnished him by Barton and Alton. Breeding pleading guilty to a charge of passing counterfeit money, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for 30 days and fined $100.

Re-elected President

R. Lewis Rutter, secretary of the Spokane & Eastern Trust company was re-elected president of the Western Union Life Insurance company at the annual meeting May 11th, when Frederick E. Goodall, president of the Spokane chamber of commerce, was re-elected vice-president. The other officers are: Philip Harding, secretary and general manager, Myron A. Folsom, general counsel, and Dr. Morris C. Robins, medical director. R. Insinger was elected a member of the finance committee, to succeed Thomas H. Brewer.

The other members are J. P. M. Richards and R. L. Rutter. Charles H. Jones was elected a member of the executive committee to act with L. M. Davenport and R. L. Rutter. The company paid its regular quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent on its paid-up capital stock of $200,000 on April 30th.

Broughton National

Broughton National Bank of Dayton, Wash., was organized May 6th with a capital of $50,000 and these officers: President, Charles J. Broughton; vice-president, J. L. Dumas; cashier, A. P. Cahill; directors, W. E. Cahill, David Barclay and Miles C. Moore of Walla Walla. The other incorporators are J. A. Anderson and John Blessing. The company will occupy the bank building where workmen are installing the steel vault. At the ceremonies attending the laying of the foundation, J. L. Dumas deposited a new 5 cent coin under each of the corner bricks. Elaborate furnishings are ordered and the bank will be equipped with every convenience of the larger banks.

Organize Real Estate Association

Spokane Real Estate Association has been organized with these officers: President, D. M. Thompson; secretary, A. T. Bowen. Other officers will be elected when the membership is more fully determined and the by-laws have been formally accepted. Mr. Bowen says there is a wide field here for the association and he expects it to become a powerful organization for the development of the city.

Two Banks Make Good Showing

Two financial institutions at Malden, Wash., a town on the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway company's main line, started from an open prairie on May 27, 1908, show these deposits in official reports. Farmers and Merchants' State, $25,146, and the First National, $22,274, making a total of close to $50,000. This is considered a creditable showing for the town, as the Farmers and Merchants' bank was only open three weeks when the call was made, and the First National had been in business only since last fall.

CHAPTER RECORD

An Open Forum Dedicated to the Associated Chapters A. I. of B. in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Independent Action and Universal Membership

The Big Chicago-Seattle Special Train

President L. B. Brady of the Chicago chapter is urging chapter men from all over the country to come and join the big Chicago-Seattle special train out over the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, and back over any selected route. President Franklin B. Johnson of the associated chapters says all chapters east of the Mississippi river, and at least the St. Louis delegation, west of the river, will join in to make the Chicago-Seattle train the greatest ever. The first stop of the big train will be at Minneapolis and the following is the entertainment which will be provided by the Minneapolis and St. Paul chapters of the American Institute of Bankers to the visiting delegates and their friends en route to the A. I. B. convention at Seattle.

Arrive at St. Paul and Minneapolis June 17th at 9 a. m.

Special trolley car to Indian Mounds and return to St. Paul.

Viewing St. Paul, the state capitol building, meeting Governor Johnson.

Special trolley to Minnehaha Falls.

Special trolley to Lake Minnetonka.

Special steamer ride around lake.

Dinner at Tonka Bay Hotel.

Special trolley back to train in Minneapolis.

St. Paul and Minneapolis bankers will join in entertaining the chapter men.

From Seattle word comes that it is probable that a majority of the delegates will arrive

Particulars of the Entertainment to be furnished by Minneapolis - St. Paul Chapters and by the Chapter and bankers of Seattle. Chapters as a rule will pass through Chicago.

Sunday night, June 20th, on the special train from Chicago and the East, and as they will be travel-stained and weary, no formal reception prior to the opening of the convention will be attempted. All delegations, however, will be met at the trains and boats by members of the reception committee, conducted to the hotels where rooms have been reserved for their use, and otherwise hospitably cared for.

As the convention will open at 10 o'clock Monday morning, the 21st, the local committee has plans under way for the early registration of the delegates, so that all will be in readiness for the opening hour.

The convention headquarters will be at the Hotel Washington. This hostelry is new and handsomely furnished, centrally located, and is able to make a large number of reservations for the delegates.

Business sessions of the convention will be held in Elks' Hall on the fourteenth floor of the Alaska Building, from which may be had excellent views of the city, the mountains and the Sound.

Seattle has no mouldering ruins, no historic battlefields, no statues in memory of her illustrious dead, no monuments commemorating their heroic services; Seattle is great not because of her past but because of the present and of the future. Seattle chapter proposes to impress this fact upon the minds of the visiting delegates.

During the afternoon of Monday, the 21st, special cars will be provided for a trip around the city, which will end at Madrona Park on Lake Washington about 5 o'clock. Large lake steamers will then be taken to some point on Mercer Island, or on the eastern shore of the lake, where lunch will be served, and, for those so inclined, a few hours will be spent in dancing. The return trip will be around the island to Leschi and Madison parks and thence to the city.

On Tuesday afternoon special cars will convey the delegates to the Exposition, where the afternoon and evening will be spent in sight-seeing and in enjoying the amusements on the Pay Streak. If arrangements can be made, the official photograph of the delegates will be taken at the Stadium. Dinner will be served at 6 o'clock, after which the delegates will be at liberty to continue sight-seeing or to return to the city.

As the business session of the third and last day will consume much time, no entertainment for the afternoon will be attempted.

In the evening, the banquet, which has become an established feature of the annual convention, will be given in the banquet hall of the Hotel Washington. Delectable delicacies will abound and elegant eloquence will prevail.

George A. Jackson, Continental National Bank, Chicago, chairman of the transportation committee, will furnish particulars, and make reservations upon request.

Tacoma Chapter

Tacoma chapter held its regular monthly meeting on May 10th, at which time the president was authorized to appoint delegates to the Seattle convention.

The evening's work was enlivened by a debate upon the question: "Resolved; That the adoption of a postal savings bank system in the United States is desirable." The decision was unanimous in favor of the affirmative. This debate served as a preliminary to the big debate which was held in the Seattle chapter rooms on the evening of May 14th. The same question was debated with Tacoma arguing the affirmative. The judges decided unanimously in favor of the Tacoma team after hearing their strong arguments. Their arguments were: (1) The results of the postal savings banking system in foreign lands; (2) the insufficiency of established commercial banks to meet public needs, and (3) that postal savings banks would act as feeders to establish institutions. Judges of the contest were J. D. Meyers of Seattle, H. A. Freeman of the Lumbermen National Bank, Portland, and G. H. Raleigh of the Bank of California, Tacoma.

About forty-five members of Tacoma chapter attended the smoker and stag party given by the Seattle chapter. The Tacoma boys went over in a parlor car chartered over the Interurban electric line. The debate, which constituted the chief entertainment, was followed by luncheon and a delightful musical program given by the Ralston Glee Club of Seattle. The affair was a success and all attending appreciated the hearty efforts made and good fellowship existing in Seattle.

San Francisco Chapter

San Francisco chapter, American Institute of Banking, at the annual election held May 18th, chose the following officers, governors and delegates to the convention of the American Institute to be held in Seattle: President, George L. Woolrich, Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank; vice-president, William A. Day, Mechanics Savings Bank; secretary, R. C. Gingg, San Francisco National Bank; treasurer, W. B. At the annual meeting of the Louisville chapter of the American Institute of Banking, Tuesday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: John T. Bate, president; Joseph Zahner, vice-president; F. W. Lensing, treasurer, and J. Dudley Winston, secretary. The following were named as delegates to the annual convention of the American Institute of Banking in Seattle in June: Charles C. Carter, delegate-at-large, and John T. Bate, Fay C. We wish to form a debating club of some of the members and have strong hopes of doing so. We don't expect that any of the members are silver-tongued orators (yet, anyway), but it is splendid training for a young man to learn to talk and be able to address an audience and think in front of a crowd, to say nothing of the benefit derived from the reading which will necessarily have to be done on the subjects.

The Portland Commercial Club has shown us every courtesy possible and we hope our chapter may be a feeder for the public-spirited body which is doing great things for Portland.

Our chapter meets regularly every second Tuesday in the month in the convention hall of the Portland Commercial Club, with social evenings intervening. Our organization has a membership of approximately two hundred.

The North Carolina Convention

Charlotte, May 27.—The State Bankers convention has ended a three days' record breaker convention. The program prepared with such care by Secretary W. H. Hunt was carried out without a hitch. The principal addresses will be found in this issue, in another column. The total membership is 283, one hundred short of the number of banks in the state. The association is doing fine work in its legal department and in the cleaning of time-locks. Secretary Hunt recommended that the work of the association be still further broadened and made more effective for the good of its membership. Among the suggestions he made, with the approval of his executive committee, are:

1st. The creating of some form of protective work to aid the banks in apprehending and avoiding bank criminals, forgers, swindlers and defaulters, by offering standing rewards for their capture and conviction.

2d. The authorization of the publication of a bankers' bulletin, to be issued at certain stated periods during the year, giving all the legal opinions rendered by your attorney and other information relating to banks.

3d. I am of the opinion that the group system, if it can be organized properly, would be of advantage to this association, as well as to the banks comprising it, and with this in view would recommend the appointment of a special committee to investigate this new feature and report at the next convention of this association, as well as any other changes they would recommend to be made in the constitution and by-laws.

The suggestions met with favor. The many social features arranged for the visitors were fully enjoyed by those present.

Maine Convention

Hascall S. Hall, secretary for Maine, announces that the annual meeting of the Maine Bankers Association will be held at the Sam-Oset, at Rockland Breakwater, on June 19th. L. A. Coolidge, until recently assistant secretary of the Treasury, and A. D. Noyes, financial editor of the N. Y. Evening Post, have accepted invitations to speak.

Further details will be announced later.

Litigation Proceedings Started

Litigation has been started in the superior court of Yakima county, Wash., which involves the state bank of Outlook, Wash., and 33 owners of town property there. O. A. Fechter obtained judgment in 1907 against W. F. McStewart on a note and the property was sold by the sheriff to satisfy the judgment. It is now claimed that McStewart was of unsound mind when he gave the note. The new turn in affairs was the result of the filing of a cross-complaint by the Cascade Lumber Company against McStewart.

Iowa Convention

The big Iowa convention will be held at Waterloo this year on June 10th and 11th. Great preparations have been made. Here is the outline.

"Every financial institution in Iowa is invited to send a representative. He can take out a membership, or pay dues at the convention. Five dollars, annual dues. Every member is entitled to one vote only, upon questions discussed, or in election of officers. No proxy voting. Visitors are desired. Officers of other bankers associations are especially invited to attend this meeting.

"They want to hear from delegates on the convention floor. The most interesting conventions are those where discussion is general. Did anything occur during the year that you would like to discuss? Are you seeking information on any point? Have you some information to give us? Use the floor."

Like all up-to-date secretaries, Mr. Dinwiddie has eliminated the buncombe addresses of welcome and response. They have kept more bankers away from the first convention session than anything else.

J. T. Brooks of Hedrick is the president and will open the ball with his annual. For headlines they will have Governor Carroll, George M. Reynolds and J. A. S. Pollard.

There will be talks by E. St. Elmo Lewis of Detroit and J. Adam Bede (note how they part their names) and at all other times general discussion will fill in the time.

The Waterloo committee presents such well known names as J. D. Easton, P. J. Martin, F. F. McElhinney, C. Shultz, J. E. Sedgwick and Ira Rodamar. The town will be "wide open" to the visitors.

The Augusta (Ga.) Clearing House Association has re-elected its officers: President, Patrick Armstrong; vice-president, L. C. Hayne; manager, Rufus H. Brown.

North Carolina Banking Conditions

President H. W. Jackson of Raleigh in an able address before the Charlotte convention :: ::

Some people, as we of the present generation were born into liberty. Some people—as the slaves of this country had liberty thrust upon them. We meet to-day in a country and among a people, who achieved liberty for themselves, their country, and their posterity.

There is heredity about patriotism as in other things. Environment makes men love their country as well as it affects them in other matters. It is the good fortune of the North Carolina bankers this year to meet in an atmosphere, patriotic both from heredity and environment. We have come to your city and desire to do honor to the patriots, who with the courage of Spartans and the wisdom of prophets, were the pioneers in the fight for American independence, that has made this republic the refuge of the oppressed from every nation and every clime. We are here to rejoice with you upon the erection of the granite shaft that will for all time commemorate the patriotism of the immortal signers of the May 20th Declaration. No wonder the descendants of those signers jealously defend the event that gives luster and glory to North Carolina and gives their names a distinction in the heraldry of fame. No section of our country has written a more glorious page in its history than this birthplace of liberty, and we are all to be congratulated upon the coming of their convention to Charlotte.

Personally I feel very happy to greet you all. Many of you I have the honor of knowing personally; others I know by reputation, and even tho' some people, outside the banking fraternity, liken bankers to icebergs, yet I know—and your friends know—you to be big-hearted men, who are faithfully working for the best financial interests in your respective localities, helping every legitimate enterprise to expand, and your banks are giving to the commercial body the life that the heart supplies to the physical body. It is gratifying that the bankers of North Carolina are recognized not only as valued leaders in financial matters, but in their communities they are reckoned among the foremost public spirited citizens and enjoy the confidence of those who know them best. It is worthy of our ambition to build solid banking houses where the deposits of our customers are held safe and where money is provided for commercial and industrial expansion; but it is the realization of the highest ambition to find bankers leaders also in church and in state as well as in the matters of banking and business.

A matter that is regarded by me as of deep interest, is the continued growth and usefulness of our association. There are 382 banking institutions in N. C. and all of them should be represented in the membership of this association, both for the good they can do the association, as well as for the benefits they can drive from intercourse and mingling with their fellow bankers.

There have been times when bankers, like men engaged in other enterprises, imagined that they had valuable secret methods which they were unwilling to disclose. But these times have passed. We have learned that we are all better off by coming together, exchanging ideas, as well as getting inspiration from gatherings like this. The association was founded 16 years ago, and the good it has accomplished among the banks of the state is ample justification for the support which you have given it during these years.

It should be our aim not only to secure the pleasure that comes from the social amenities that mark our annual gatherings, in which lasting friendships are formed by men of like tastes, but to increase its usefulness to us as individuals and to the banks we represent. In union there is strength. The bigger the influence gained by the banks the better for the commercial and financial interests of our communities, for while banks are expected to make money, they are organized primarily to facilitate business and the stronger the banks of any community the better are they able to furnish the necessary funds to stimulate new factories and new enterprises and to enlarge those that are prospering.

Bankers now everywhere recognize the value of proper legal supervision. It is the uniform testimony of bankers in those states where the laws have been carefully drawn that the banks have profited by wise legal provision looking to absolute safety under state examination.

I believe that in North Carolina we have the best supervision of state banks of any state in the South. The administration of our banking laws, drawn both to safeguard the interest of the stockholder and the public dealing with banks, cannot be too highly commended. The officials charged with that duty have been careful and firm.

Very properly the commission regards itself as the guide, mentor and friend of the banks; where one is found weak, it strengthens it; if found pursuing an unsafe policy it endeavors to reform and thus save the bank. Our banking laws however need improvement, and among other things there should be two examinations a year for state banks in North Carolina, instead of one, thus putting our supervision of state banks on the same basis as the national banks.

The commercial prosperity of North Carolina, which is steadily increasing, upon sound foundation, makes it highly important that the financial institutions of the state should be abreast of the times in all modern methods and devices for saving time and assuring accuracy. By coming together in conventions, the bankers of the state are enabled to learn those plans which have proved successful, and upon the recommendation of bankers who have safely and successfully tried new methods, other bankers may profit by their adoption. By conferences with each other, swapping ideas and relating experiences, a greater uniformity in banking practices can be wrought throughout the state.

Your executive committee was of the unanimous opinion that one whole day of this convention should be given to the discussion of practical banking topics. Not in lengthy speeches and prepared addresses by men appointed for the purpose, but that a free and off hand expression of opinion be given by any member on the floor regarding the subjects on the programme or upon any other matter which may be of interest to a banker.

The constitution of North Carolina guarantees that there shall be no discrimination in taxation. The method in this state of taxing banks however, violates this principle. Under present laws banks pay upon every cent of both capital and surplus and this rule of taxation is not carried out with reference to any other corporations or individuals. Why should banks pay upon actual value while some other corporations pay only a half or two thirds? Farmers pay from 30 to 50 per cent on mules and lands; merchants pay at the same rate in proportion to actual value. Is it in keeping with the pledge of the constitution that banks should be singled out to be taxed upon actual value while most others pay on half, more or less, of actual value?

This course is now pursued with reference to banks, with the result that the banks of North Carolina pay more than their just proportion of the expenses of the state government.

The banks are perfectly willing to pay every dollar that is their fair share of the taxes, but we submit that the time has come for us to demand a "square deal."

One of the objects of the association, during the coming year, should be to see that this discrimination in the matter of taxation against banking institutions compared with other corporations, is corrected.

I feel that I cannot take the time to go into the details of this tax question and it is, perhaps, more appropriate that some of our lawyer bankers should give their earnest attention to the subject. I desire rather to suggest than to exhaust a topic and to appeal to our committee on legislation to study, frame and carry to the legislature with the endorsement of this association and the encouragement of its members a bill that will obtain some measure of relief for the banks from the burden of this oppressive and unjust tax.

A matter which interests the national banks at this time is the recent ruling of the comptroller, by which the old method of the redemption of bank notes will be improved.

Under the plan which went into effect April 1st, those banks whose 5 per cent fund is good, will have their new notes shipped to them the day the old notes are redeemed, instead of having to wait for one to two weeks or even longer. The old method of redemption of bank notes was cumbersome, full of delays and has been a source of irritation to banks for many years. And it should have been entitled an act for the benefit of Tom Platt and the U. S. Express Company. Even under the new plan of redemption it is still a nuisance, and the remedy for it is to make national bank notes "lawful reserve." Silver dollars and certificates worth 47 cents are now lawful reserve for national banks. Greenbacks, with nothing behind them are also. Yet national bank notes secured by government bonds that are a mortgage on the customs and revenues of the U. S. are not. The two best moneys are gold and national bank notes, and yet the latter may not be reserve. Therefore make them so, and stop the endless chain folly.

In conclusion, let me say I have to report to you that the association is in a very prosperous condition, is increasing in membership, and is performing in a most satisfactory way the purposes for which it was organized, as will appear from the reports of your most efficient secretary and treasurer. I wish to express to you again my sincere appreciation of the high honor you have conferred upon me, in electing me as your presiding officer, and it shall be my high endeavor to, in some measure, justly your confidence by fair rulings and freedom from a long address.

New Faces at Illinois Group Meetings

Several new faces made their appearance at the Illinois Group meetings last week. H. A. Giesen represented the Mechanic American National Bank, St. Louis. Giesen hails from Austin, Texas, and is a bright clever young fellow and has recently done time for the Mechanics American in Oklahoma territory. He could make an interesting talk on the subject of the guaranty of bank deposits, from his practical knowledge of the operation of that law in the new state.

Robert E. Gamble introduced himself as representing the Drovers Deposit National Bank, Chicago. He is a Missouri boy and made a good impression on the Illinois bankers.

A real live wire is Bleish Monyhan, representing the old reliable, the Fletcher National Bank, Indianapolis, Indiana. He comes by banking naturally, being the son of Jonce Monyhan, president of the Citizens State Bank, Orleans, Indiana, who was president of the Indiana Bankers Association two years ago.

Frank C. Fisbeck, cashier of the Terre Haute National Bank, Terre Haute, Indiana, attended the Paris Group meeting accompanied by his daughter. She is of real bankers stock and consented to sit in the Group photograph and share in the automobile ride. Colin Campbell did the honors.

Group Ten, Iowa

Group Ten, Iowa, held a well attended meeting at Ottumwa, on May 19th. There was an interesting program and the hospitality of the Ottumwa bankers was just as lavish as the group officers were modest in keeping their names off of every scrap of printing issued, from program to luncheon and club tickets. Theirs be a laurel wreath. Edwin G. Moon welcomed the visitors and L. F. Richmond of Albia responded. Talks were made by S. F. McConnell of Bloomfield and John H. Blair of Des Moines.

in my opinion, be encouraged to invest their commercial deposits in long-time bonds.

Bank Individuality should be Preserved

I have always believed that the individuality of our banks should be preserved, and it seems to me when our methods of doing business are considered in contrast to those of foreign countries, particularly as to the number of our banks and the relations which they bear to individual communities, it is essential and fundamental that any plan for the issuance of currency to prevent and dispel trouble should be such as would enable individual banks to meet such conditions very largely within themselves at least with the minimum of inconvenience which would afford a maximum of security.

Use of Credit should Be More Flexible

Mobility of our credits must then be the keynote to any revision of the law for the betterment of our currency system. When it is considered that there is no limitation placed upon the issue of checks and drafts, our great credit medium of exchange, which automatically contracts and expands, to meet the business needs of the country, can there by any possible reason why currency—another form of credit—should not be given the same freedom of issue?

Fellow bankers, I want to call your attention to a fact, which in itself is an object lesson with a bearing upon our currency system of the greatest importance. In one week in September, 1907, the Imperial Bank of Germany issued 100 million dollars of credit notes to exchange for its other credit obligations, while we were importing gold to allay a panic. It took about an equal amount, or 100 million dollars, of such metal to accomplish the purpose. This becomes the more apparent when coupled with the fact that the German bank held a surplus reserve of over 44 per cent, accumulated for emergency.

The credit note issues adopted by foreign countries which enables them in times of need to issue their notes promptly and keep the money market in a stable condition, in contrast to our rigid, inflexible issue, should arouse the banks and the public to prompt action.

The question of the absolute safety of credit note issues is one of vital interest to us all. It is admitted that such notes must at all times be perfectly good in the pockets of the people.

Credit Currency Safe

I believe the history of the transactions of the Suffolk Bank of Boston as the redemption agency for as many as five hundred and fifteen Eastern and other banks, operating practically without restriction of law, and issuing notes in many states without having any lien upon the assets, other than the general lien any creditor had, and without any special guaranty fund to care for notes of failed banks, demonstrates the safety of an issue of credit notes.

The history of the ebb and flow of currency in the Suffolk Bank was one of contraction and expansion, exactly meeting the demands of trade. There was never any inflation, and the loss was less than one-eighth of one per cent to the note holders.

The Bank of the State of Indiana issued credit notes upon its assets and those of its ten branches, and during the panic of 1857 it was practically the only bank in the country able to continue specie payments.

At the time legal tender notes were issued by the government, gold went to a premium and was driven out of circulation. Yet this bank has the unique history of having been able to continue payments in gold for some time after the United States Treasury ceased.

Here we have a bank excelling the government itself, able at all times to issue credit to its customers, in the form desired, either bank credits or note credits, keeping its notes at all times redeemable in specie, the fundamental principle which must underly any note issues. The notes were so good that after the enactment of the national bank act, they were preferred to national bank notes; hence, the government was compelled to force them out of competition, and did so by the enactment of a tax of 10 per cent upon the note issue of state banks.

To become familiar with the financial history of our own country is to settle forever affirmatively the question of the safety of such note issues, which can be verified by the history of credit currency in Scotland, more than two hundred years, in France for more than one hundred years, and in Canada for more than forty years.

In the operation of credit notes the selfish desire to make money must necessarily be one of the most important features. It settles the question of the necessity for a tax and also that vital question of prompt redemption.

If a banker can make money on his note issues, he will certainly forward every note of another bank which comes into his possession promptly, so he can issue one of his own at a profit. This eliminates the necessity of a tax, except, perhaps, to create a guaranty fund and will insure that when a note has left the pockets of the people, it is soon lodged with the bank and is on its way to redemption. Hence the law of demand and supply regulates the amount of notes a bank can keep in circulation. The demand must be created in advance of the issue of the note, hence, there can be no inflation.

Can anything more simple be devised—a circulating medium which affords perfect security and automatically avoids inflation?

My conclusions on this subject are that if the banks are given the right to use their credit, the right to which the advance and evolution of the science of banking in the last twenty-five years entitles them, it will provide the elasticity necessary to overcome the defects in our system, and with some improvements in the matter of our reserve, will prevent panics and place our monetary system on a basis to cope with the great financial powers of the world and make for the further extension of our commerce and the glory and upbuilding of our nation.

Group Six, Wisconsin

Group Six, Wisconsin, will meet at Merrill, May 20th. The program is full of interest. F. J. Smith of Merrill will speak on postal banks, G. W. Mead of Grand Rapids on ideal bank assets, F. W. Kubasta, on legislation, and F. J. Wood, of Grand Rapids will read the round table discussion on the following topics.

Should national banks be permitted to loan on real estate?

Does the distribution of calendars and the like bring results warranting the expenditure?

How do you handle the exchange problem? Is it an item of profit to you? Do you work in harmony with your competitors?

Should previous experience of the (to be) managing officers be considered in the granting of charters for new banks?

At the afternoon meeting H. S. Ritchie, of New London and M. B. Rosenberry of Wausau will speak. There will be a smoker and a trip to "Dudleys" for a trout dinner. George A. Foster is president and E. B. Redford, secretary.

What's the Truth About Sixes vs. Fours?

Many an automobile owner and prospective buyer asks this question; and here is the best answer we can give:

Theoretically the six so far outshines the four that the four hardly casts a shadow.

"Four" makers do not advertise the superiority of the four—they wait until their salesmen reach you personally, and then they say that the six is great in theory, "but—"

That "but—" is meant to get you to buy a four. Its true import is, that most of the makers who have experimented with sixes (probably the maker whose salesman sees you is one of them) have not reached success.

But (and here's a "but" that is positive, not negative) know this: The reached success nearly two years ago. So great has been its success that the Winton Company has not produced a four-cylinder car since June, 1907. We could not in good conscience try to sell you a four in competition with the Winton Six.

WINTON SIX

We are in business to sell cars. Do you suppose for a minute that if our sixes were not better than fours (and by the way, the old Winton Model M of 1907 is today as good a four as you are likely to find anywhere), we would have put our factory, our investment, our faith and our future into sixes exclusively?

Not likely. No, just give us credit for ordinary business judgment; and, as a precaution against being influenced to buy a four on misinformation or misleading suggestion, get the facts about the Winton Six.

And the price, too, is right. The 48 horse-power Winton Six sells at $3000. That's at least $1000 less than the same horse-power will cost you in the best known fours—the gas light types of motor car progress.

Banking Conditions in Kansas

selves very important factors in the way of saving and convenience to the banker, and a financial benefit to the association. The association is doing everything possible for the betterment of the banking conditions of the state, and therefore for the betterment of each bank.

Our association now has the nucleus of a fine library of financial literature, consisting of the annual reports and proceedings of the Kansas Bankers Association since its organization and many reports of the various other state organizations, reports of the banking departments and the banking laws of the various states, and many volumes from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, as well as numerous pamphlets of great value bearing on legal decisions and current financial legislation. And, to add to this, the association was recently the recipient from the Hon. J. R. Mulvane of Topeka of about one hundred volumes, and numerous pamphlets which we greatly appreciate and for which the donor has our sincere thanks.

This prompts a suggestion that, with little effort the association can in a few years accumulate a splendid library, which will be of inestimable value to it as an organization and to its individual members, a movement I heartily recommend, even to the annual appropriation of a moderate sum to further that end.

You will all undoubtedly be interested in knowing that in addition to the many advantages and helps the association has to offer its members, the organization is a flattering success financially. The earnings in the insurance department increased quite materially during the past year, and that through the aid and patronage of only a part of the Kansas banks. The association is worth, in round numbers, something over $20,000 in good available assets, such as cash on hand with its treasurer, office furniture and fixtures placed at a very low figure, and investments in the form of high grade Kansas bonds now held in trust by the designated depositaries, The Kansas Trust Company of Kansas City, and The Prudential Trust Company of Topeka.

All should make it a point to reciprocate whenever it is possible to do so, and place their burglary insurance and fidelity bonds with the association. The more loyal the banks are to the association the more effective is its work.

At the December meeting of the executive council it was decided to invite the building and loan associations of the state to become members of our association, giving them a building and loan department. I believe it was a step in the right direction inasmuch as those associations are under the supervision of our state banking department, and I feel that it will strengthen and help our association, and be of mutual benefit to all concerned.

It was my privilege and pleasure to attend all of the group meetings of our association held during the past year. I enjoyed them all to the fullest extent, and feel that much good is being done at these gatherings. I like these meetings; the local banker gets closer to his neighbor than is possible at the state conventions, and they meet as it were, on a more common plane. Then, the group associations are the very foundation and strong right hand of the state association, and their help and influence is needed in making the mother association larger, better and stronger in all of her branches.

We really have great reason for feeling proud of our state association and it is to be hoped that the time is not far distant when every bank of the state will become a member, and that its influence may continue to grow with its membership until it will be second to none among the sister state associations of the country. If there are any banks represented here to-day that are not members, I earnestly invite and urge that they come into the fold as soon as possible and receive the many benefits and privileges accorded to them as such.

The Kansas Bankers Association is destined to be a wonderful organization, and has within its possibilities the power of doing much good to the interest of all bankers in the state. I feel much honored in being elected its president and pleased for the privilege of serving during the past year, and I take this opportunity of thanking all the members of every committee, our worthy secretary, and, in fact, all who have taken an interest in our association for their mutual assistance and the good will manifested.

There remains but one other subject concerning us as bankers which I desire to speak of. In Kansas we have had our grasshoppers, our long, unbroken drouths, our be-whiskered Pepper, our Mary Ellen, our Carrie Nation, and now have the latest and greatest of them all, our bank guaranty law.

With its policies perhaps we should not concern ourselves for we all know that schemes are often concocted by men who know better, simply to get votes for the purpose of maintaining office and power. The name itself is delusive and false. There never was a bolder case of false pretenses perpetrated upon the people of this state than giving the name of guaranty to that act. There is not guaranty or strength enough in the law to entitle it to be called by that name, we bankers might just as well ask our customers to attach a two cent postage stamp as collateral to a loan of $50 as to tolerate this law. That the people think they want it, I hold to be no excuse for their legislators who well know that its final end will be worse for them.

This law raises no funds to speak of to guarantee any bank only in good times when there are no failures but does create a perpetual assessment of a small amount that would not pay the interest after a crisis and the fund never would recover from its depletion. While there is a provision in the law which allows a bank to get from under by advertising for six months its intention to do so providing all losses are paid at that time, a repetition of the experiences of 1893 would involve the banks so deeply that they never could get away from the annual assessments.

If we name this thing a guaranty it would be better that we make it such, and all go into the doctrine of the Socialist at once, have state own everything and the individual nothing.

There is no possible way of getting national banks into any such scheme. President Taft comes out in courageous language and says so in a manner that could not in any way be misunderstood. He states very forcibly that he never was in favor of the radical platform of the Democratic party as to the guaranty question and he has not changed his views since. He believes that guaranteeing of bank deposits to be wrong in principle and precept. He also says that there is nothing that the national banks can do in any way, shape or form to guarantee their deposits without authority from an act of Congress.

President Taft has proven himself a fearless and courageous statesman and leader, and will not submit to any state legislation affecting the policies of the nation. The people of the East look upon this act by our state as one of the vagaries or freaks such as greenbackism, free silver, and the government warehouse proposition for storing wheat.

Accounts Solicited—Our facilities insure prompt attention

Shall we drive all of the national banks out of the state by making laws that will interfere with their rights and privileges in competition with our state institutions? I dare say that the people would not be in favor of this law if they understood its real meaning and effect. They are deluded into the belief that it is a state guaranty and is a safe protection. It has all of the ill effects of a substantial guaranty law. Among the greatest of such effects is that it takes away from the depositor any care, discretion or discrimination on his part, and enables the weakest bank to compete successfully with the strongest.

It is not right that sound banks should be taxed for losses of unsound banks. If sound banks receive no benefits from their conservative and careful business methods why should they try to keep up a high standard? If a bank with $10,000 capital can delude people under the guaranty law and make them believe that they are just as safe as they would be with their deposits in a bank with ten times the capital and double liability, why should the larger capital be maintained? There would certainly be no encouragement for strong financial institutions. The law will undoubtedly discourage it in every sense of the word. It is only reasonable to suppose that punishment should be inflicted on doers of wrong instead of on the innocent who has no oversight or control over the affairs of the transgressor.

Our guaranty law, although a delusion and a snare, a mere bubble that will be punctured by the first ill wind that blows, will, on account of its deception, put a premium on reckless and incompetent banking.

In conclusion my advice and intention is to keep away from it. I say to you that if you are weak go into it, but if you are strong and have pride in the strength, stability and welfare of your bank, stay out, and rely upon the eternal and everlasting truth, that that which is wrong in principle and precept must and will perish. If this law is not checked in its early childhood great will be the calamity in its downfall, which will surely come, and to the stockholders who are doubly liable for the debts of their bank it will be a never ending curse.

I have great confidence in the average banker of Kansas, and I feel that he will be able to meet any condition that may arise, and I earnestly hope that under the circumstances the state banks will join hands with the national banks and stand together and stay out of the guaranty law, and not bring trouble and disaster upon themselves and the fair name of our state.

Harrison Nesbit

Harrison Nesbit, formerly national bank examiner in charge of the Pittsburgh and Cleveland district, at a meeting of the board of directors of the Bank of Pittsburgh, N. A., Tuesday was elected first vice-president and a member of the board to succeed J. R. Paull, who resigned on January 1st. Mr. Nesbit entered on his duties as an administrative officer of the bank at once, his resignation having been accepted by the comptroller of the currency, who said, in commenting upon it:

"A better examiner has never been in the service."

Mr. Nesbit was born at Osceola, Mo., 1874. He attended the Episcopal High school, Alexandria, Va., then he entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Boston, later being graduated from the National University Law school, Washington, D. C., at the head of his class. Last September he was appointed national bank examiner for the Pittsburgh and Cleveland district, succeeding J. B. Cunningham, who resigned. Prior to that time he had been an examiner for about six months. Before entering the national banking service he was an assistant solicitor of the department of commerce and labor at Washington for four years.

Mr. Nesbit was also chairman of Bank Examiners District No. 4, which includes the states of Ohio, West Virginia, and all of Pennsylvania outside of Philadelphia.

The Bank of Pittsburgh National Association is the eldest bank west of the Allegheny Mountains, having been organized in 1810. Next February the bank will celebrate its one hundredth anniversary. It has a capital of $2,400,000, surplus and profits of over $3,000,000, and assets of over $25,000,000, and has ever been regarded in banking circles as being one of the most substantial and conservative banking institutions in the United States.

Des Moines, May 27.—The program for the state meeting of the Iowa Bankers Association, issued by Secretary J. M. Dinwiddie of Cedar Rapids, indicates that there will be something doing in Waterloo, June 10th and 11th that will be of interest to Iowa financiers. The program for Thursday morning opens with the invocation by Rev. Walter H. Rollins of Waterloo. Then comes the president's address by J. T. Brooks of Hedrick. The program will be given over largely to reports by Treasurer Heinsheimer, of Glenwood, Secretary Dinwiddie, of Cedar Rapids, Chairman E. T. Scott, of Cedar Rapids, for the taxation committee, Chairman H. T. Blackburn, of Des Moines, for the legislative committee, and Chairman J. T. Brooks, of Hedrick, for the protective committee.

Governor B. F. Carroll, formerly state auditor and thoroughly familiar with Iowa banking conditions, will open the afternoon program with an address. He will be followed by George M. Reynolds of the Continental National of Chicago, and by J. A. S. Pollard of Fort Madison. Then will come discussions of various topics which bankers are urged to suggest. Special emphasis is laid upon the non-member who is asked to give any good reason for not joining the association.

Two addresses comprise the Friday morning program. "Making Advertising Pay a Bank" is the subject of an address to be given by E. St. Elmo Lewis of Detroit. "Modern Money Making" is the subject of an address by Hon. J. Adam Bede, of Pine City, Minn. Then will come the adoption of resolutions, election of officers and adjournment. The Waterloo committee consists of J. D. Easton as chairman of the executive committee; P. J. Martin, chairman of the registration committee; F. F. McElhinney, chairman of the reception committee; C. Shultz, chairman of the social committee; J. E. Sedgwick, chairman and Ira Rodamar, secretary of the hotel committee.

There is considerable interest in the nomination of a state vice-president and a member of the committee on nomination for the American Bankers Association. H. F. Balch, present vice-president, has called a meeting of Iowa members during the session. John H. Blair of Des Moines, E. J. Curtin of Decorah, A. T. Averill of Cedar Rapids and L. E. Stevens, of Ottumwa, have been mentioned to succeed Mr. Balch. An effort will be made to increase the Iowa membership to 500 so that the state will have a representative on the executive council. The president of the state association will name the delegates to the A. B. A.

It is apparent that the contest for state officers for next year will not be confined to the office of treasurer as was indicated last week. Waterloo people are backing J. D. Easton of that city for the place and John McHugh of Sioux City is being backed quite as strenuously in other sections of the state. McHugh had a decidedly healthy backing at the group meeting at Ottumwa. Waterloos are claiming that the place should be conceded to Mr. Easton but apparently this view is not shared unanimously. There is no means of determining whether D. B. Allen of Arlington or I. M. Sproull of Washington is in the lead for treasurer.

Meeting of Group Two

An attempt to secure the passage of a tariff revision resolution was turned down cold by the bankers of Group Two at the meeting at Fort Dodge last Friday. A shoe manufacturer named Green presented a resolution recommending the appointment of a national tariff commission and calling upon a prompt ending of the present tariff controversy. The bankers declared that the resolution was out of order and voted it down. H. A. Abbott of Milford was chosen chairman of the group and P. O. Johnson of Milford, secretary. The program, as printed in THE CHICAGO BANKER last week was carried out. The address of George E. Roberts of Chicago was regarded as a feature and as usual, Mr. Roberts gave most delightful talk upon "Banking and Currency Reform."

Meeting of Group Ten

Bankers of Group Ten enjoyed the hospitality of the Ottumwa bankers to the utmost at the meeting Wednesday, May 19th. While each delegate was given his luncheon at the Ballingall hotel as a guest of the bankers, it was informal and there was no program. The session opened at 1:30 where Attorney M. C. Gilmore welcomed the bankers to Ottumwa. Col. L. T. Richmond of the First National at Albia gave a witty response and accepted the keys of the city. S. F. McConnell, cashier of the First National of Bloomfield stirred up a lively discussion in his paper on "Advertising its Merits and Abuses." He took a stand in favor of advertising and pointed out the benefits that banks may derive by intelligently placing the merits of their institutions before the people in a comprehensive manner.

John H. Blair of the Des Moines National spoke informally upon "The Relation of the City Banker to his Country Correspondent and another interesting discussion followed. The bankers were given a street car ride over the city.

Parole of Former Cashier Causes Sensation

The parole of Leroy Ware, formerly cashier of the Farmers and Drovers of Seymour after he had served about a year for fraudulent banking and for responsibility for a shortage of $329,000, has caused a tremendous sensation throughout southern Iowa. Ware was not sooner released from the penitentiary at Fort Madison than he was arrested again for making false entries on another indictment than the one he had been convicted of. The board of parole which granted his liberty took evidence which in its opinion showed that Ware was a scapegoat for others and that thirteen months was long enough for him to serve under the circumstances. People at Seymour seem inclined to be against Ware, and there is much vigorous condemnation for the members of the board of parole for the action taken.

Final Settlement of Mallory Estate

The final terms of the settlement by which Mrs. Annie L. Mallory and her daughter Mrs. Jessie M. Thayer have compromised the claim brought against them by creditors of the defunct First National at Chariton have been

MATURING SERIALLY, 1925 TO 1940

Principal and Semi-Annual Interest (April 1st and October 1st) Payable at the State Bank of Chicago. Denomination, $1,000

¶ The Idaho-Oregon Light & Power Company furnishes electric light and power to the cities of Boise, Emmett and Payette, Idaho. From these operations the net earnings for the year 1908 were $123,500. Present operations in these three cities, and earnings from new lighting and power contracts in territory now served by the Company's lines will produce net earnings for the year 1909 amounting to $180,000.

¶ At Ox Bow Bend, in the Snake River—55 miles north of Huntington, Oregon—the Company is developing, with the money derived from the sale of the bonds now offered, a remarkable water power which will produce 21,000 salable horse-power, measured in Boise.

¶ Construction will be completed about April, 1910, and the entire plant will then be ready to operate. New business then available will double the gross earnings without much increase in operating expenses. Net earnings from present operations are sufficient to cover all fixed charges, including interest on the bonds issued for the Ox Bow Construction.

¶ The rapid growth of the surrounding territory, through the development of orchards and intensive farming in the Boise and Payette Valleys, insures an increasing market for this power.

¶ This bond issue constitutes a first mortgage lien on the hydro-electric development of 21,000 horse-power, valuable riparian rights, exclusive water rights, all property now owned or hereafter to be acquired by the Company, 120 miles of transmission lines in Idaho and Oregon, with sub-stations, franchises and distribution systems in the cities of Boise, Payette and Emmett, Idaho.

Condition of Iowa Nationals

The abstract of the conditions of national banks of Iowa exclusive of the reserve cities as shown by reports to the comptroller of the currency shows that the average reserve was 16.73 on April 28th as against 16.63 per cent on February 5th, loans and discounts increased from $89,455,658 to $94,584,873; gold coin from $2,685,955 to $2,720,790; lawful money reserve from $7,686,356 to $8,065,814; individual deposits from $90,655,575 to $94,154,349.

Des Moines Clearings

Des Moines bank clearings show a gain for the week ending May 22d of $586,916.51 over the corresponding week of last year. The total clearings for the week were $3,589,909.60.

Increase in Deposits Causes Gossip

The recent report of the Central State of Des Moines showing an increase in deposits for the institution of from $1,000,000 to $2,400,000 in less than four months, has caused not a little gossip among Iowa bankers. Undoubtedly the increase is the result of the acquisition of Simon Casaday as president of the Central State. Many bankers say that the gain in deposits shown by the institution has never been equalled in Iowa.

State Bank Call

The state bank department has issued a call for the condition of savings and state banks and trust companies at the close of business on May 18th. Not long ago the department issued a call for the benefit of the national monetary commission but did not regard it as an official call. The latest call was issued by Head Examiner Frank Roberts who returned last week from a two weeks' vacation in Georgia.

New Banks Approved

State Auditor Bleakley has approved the articles and issued charters for the new Carroll Trust and Savings at Carroll and the Buffalo Savings at Buffalo.

Return from Texas

Mr. and Mrs. Homer A. Miller have returned to Des Moines from San Antonio, Texas, where

Mrs. Miller had been for several months recuperating. Mr. Miller is telling of a tarpon six feet in length which he caught in the Gulf of Mexico and which he left at San Antonio to be mounted so that it may be displayed in the Iowa National of this city.

Iowa State Savings Hold Election

The Iowa State Savings at Sioux City held its election last week. The officers were re-elected as follows: John McHugh, president; H. G. Weare, vice-president; L. H. Henry, cashier; W. H. Beck, P. S. Kalish, H. A. Jandt, M. L. Flinn, C. Breun, Jr., Henry Metz, F. A. McCornack, H. G. Weare and John McHugh, directors.

Cut Down Number of Directors

The Mingo Trust & Savings at Mingo has amended its articles cutting down the number of directors from nine to five.

Reward Paid

The First National at Imogene has paid $350 as reward for the capture of A. J. Walla, one of the three men who robbed the Imogene bank recently. The bank remembered all who were in any way connected with the capture paying to E. A. Moore $75; William Hervey, $50; L. S. Holmes, $50; Lester Flynn, $50; C. Ross, $25; Mrs. Stull, $25 for finding part of the money; John Sims, $10 for recovering money and other smaller sums. Lester Flynn was given the revolver which was taken from the captured robber.

Elevator Drops Seven Stories

One of the elevators in the Security Bank building at Sioux City dropped seven stories with two passengers hanging on for dear life a few days ago. Strange to say no one was hurt, but Dr. William Tharp and Conductor Glenn Reister received a fright that they will not soon forget. The engineer in the basement supposed that neither elevator was running and that both were at the bottom of the shaft. Instead, this one cage was on the seventh story. It had just started down when the engineer shut off the power and the car shot downward at terrific speed.

Asks for Pardon

Alfred Paul, who tried a Pat Crowe stunt on A. G. Smith, president of the Citizens National of Clinton and got five years for it, has asked the state board of parole for a pardon. Smith was told to deposit $500 in a certain spot under penalty of death. He did so and when Paul went to get the money, he was promptly nabbed by officers. He said that he was sent for the money by two other men who escaped.

Acquire Control of First National

Homer A. Miller, president of the Iowa National at Des Moines, and Ed. McDonald, Carroll county representative in the Iowa legislature, have acquired a controlling interest in the First National at Coon Rapids, having purchased the stock of A. and Joseph Dixon. Mr. McDonald has been vice-president for many years and now becomes president. The Dixons will retire.

New Member on Drainage Commission

There seems little room for doubt that Al Miller, cashier of the Home Savings of Des Moines will be one of the members of the new Iowa Drainage, Water Ways and Conservation Commission to be named soon by Governor Carroll. Mr. Miller is one of the leading Iowa boosters for water way navigation.

Banking Notes

F. B. Kingdon has been promoted from assistant cashier to cashier of the Monroe National and Savings at Monroe. He succeeds Charles T. Schenck who recently went to Big Timber, Mont. A. G. Warner was made assistant cashier.

The Black Hawk National, at Waterloo, has let the contract for the structural steel for the new building it proposes to erect at once.

John S. Eastman, president of the State Guaranty, at Newkirk, Okla., was married in Des Moines last week to Miss Zella Thomas, a popular Des Moines society girl.

The executive committee of the Des Moines Bankers Club met last week to make arrangements for the annual banquet which was held at the Grant club, May 27th.

W. H. Ingham of Algona, a veteran banker there, was in the city last week on business.

C. H. Martin, president of the People's Savings, Des Moines, has returned from a business trip to Chicago.

E. G. Peak, of Valley Junction, has been chosen to succeed E. C. De Vere as cashier of the Farmers Security at Perry.

Horace A. Foote, cashier of the Citizens State at Bristow, is dead at the age of 45, after an illness of many months. He was also associated with his father-in-law, John W. Ray, in the banking business at Allison.

South Carolina

Secretary MacVeagh will be quite popular with the South Carolina bankers this year, since he is intending to give them an ocean ride at the Wrightsville Beach (N. C.) convention, on the revenue boat, "Seminole," on June 16-18. The Wilmington Clearing House is looking after the social end of it. Among the well known speakers will be: F. H. Fries, of Winston-Salem; J. D. Walker of Sparta, Ga.; W. J. Montgomery of Marion; L. G. Holleman, of Anderson; I. A. Banks of St. Matthews and others. This is a convention in which (not the governor) the North Carolina bankers do the handsome thing to the (not the governor) bankers of South Carolina.

Check Kiting

Even Chicago with its rigid banking rules and strict supervision hears rumors of check kiting by important people, as between cities. The Charles E. Smith arrest may only be a beginning. Bankers hold the kiting of checks to be both dishonest and dangerous and the temporary profit should be disregarded. A kited check should be stamped as counterfeit money is—or ought to be, and then thrown out.

A Talk on Interstate Protection

One of the practical talks scheduled for the Wisconsin convention will be by Charles R. Frost, secretary for Minnesota, on interstate protection. This is the new protective gospel and since it is in full operation as between Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas, with the big National Surety Company as a full partner, all state associations will be interested to know how it works. The executive council of the A. B. A. is investigating the direct reward system, a special committee having been appointed at the Briarcliff meeting. The question is real and practical.

Frank V. Baldwin

Cashier Frank V. Baldwin of the Commercial and Farmers National, Baltimore, was in Chicago last week on business for his bank. He was thoughtful enough to make reservations for the A. B. A. convention while here, and to write "everybody" to come to the Maryland convention at Blue Mountain, June 22-3-4.

Minnesota & Ontario Power Co. Bonds

Offered by any firm the proposed loan of the Minnesota & Ontario Power Company would deserve the attention of the careful investor, and coming as it does through Peabody, Houghteling & Co., of this city, it may be regarded as of the highest order. Mr. Moore, of the sales department of the firm, explains that these bonds are guaranteed by the actual endorsement on each bond of the Backus-Brooks Company, of Minneapolis, the principal stockholders of the Minnesota & Ontario Power Company. The Backus-Brooks Company, which is one of the largest lumber operators in the Northwest, was established in 1884, practically without capital. Besides paying substantial dividends to its stockholders, it has accumulated net assets, conservatively valued at $5,000,000. In its own name and through its subsidiary companies, it owns over 500,000,000 feet of the finest White and Norway pine in Minnesota and Ontario, and the annual output of its mills is in excess of 75,000,000 feet per annum.

The Minnesota & Ontario Power Company was organized to acquire and develop the water power on both sides of the Rainy River at International Falls, Minnesota and Fort Frances, Ontario, and now owns, by grants and patents, by purchase and contract, under the laws and administrative acts of both the Canadian and American governments, complete shore rights, water rights, and flowage rights, as well as a substantial amount of real estate for the location of its mills, the whole constituting a fee simple ownership of the most complete character. E. W. Backus and the Backus-Brooks Company, from whom the Power Company has purchased the property, have been engaged for over ten years in accumulating complete rights to this water power and in studying the most advantageous methods for its development. Over $1,250,000 has already been wisely and economically expended, and considerable progress has been made in the construction of the dam and improvements of the channel. The vendors have received no cash for the property, and the entire proceeds of these bonds are available for the completion of the hydraulic development of the property, the installation of pulp and paper mills, and electrical equipment, and to furnish the company with sufficient working capital. Mr. Smith, of Peabody, Houghteling & Co., is a vice-president of the Power Company, and Mr. Peabody himself is a director. Peabody, Houghteling & Co., 181 La Salle Street, will send circulars, maps, and illustrations, showing the security offered for the $3,000,000 6 per cent loan, offered at par and interest. The value of the security is three times the bonded debt.

Decorah, Ia.

The Decorah bankers knew how to make the Group Four meeting a record-breaker. On the reverse of the invitation was printed a three-color menu card, showing just what to expect. Group committees on entertainment can take a hint from this.

Massachusetts Bankers Association

At the meeting of the executive council of the Massachusetts Bankers Association, held May 7th, it was voted to hold the annual convention at Falmouth, Mass., June 15th and 16th.

G. W. Hyde, secretary, may be addressed at P. O. box 394, Boston.

E. E. Clausen of Newville, and J. Kelly of Devil's Lake, and others are promoting a new bank at Newville, N. D.

Group Eight, Illinois

The Beardstown meeting of Group Eight, Illinois, was very successfully carried out under the chairmanship of E. E. Crabtree, of Jacksonville. M. P. Berry of Carthage is the new chairman and made a nice little speech thanking those present for the honor. There was a river trip down to La Grange Locks, followed by an evening entertainment. An address, "What the Secretary of the Illinois Bankers Association Is Doing for Country Bankers," was delivered by State Secretary R. L. Rinaman, of Chicago. Mr. Rinaman spoke along the general lines of work of the association, bringing to the attention of the members many matters of particular interest.

Franklin L. Johnson of St. Louis, president of the American Institute of Bankers, Mr. Guilkey, of Chicago, representing the American Surety Co., both made impromptu addresses at the call of the chairman.

Hon. Andrew Russel, state treasurer, was also called upon and spoke of the pleasure of being in attendance at the meeting, and paid a high compliment to Beardstown upon its manifestations of prosperity, and he said, "By all means, Beardstown is on the map." His remarks were roundly applauded.

Among the heavy artillery from Chicago were Robert H. Harrison, F. W. Thompson, P. B. Skinner, W. G. Edens, Wm. Howard, Robert Walk, R. F. Newhall, C. S. Campbell, A. Corneau, Geo. A. Jackson, R. C. Wilson, Houston Jones, E. A. Garad, R. R. Miller, Dan Norman, G. F. Emery and John Fletcher.

St. Louis sent F. L. Johnson, J. B. Henckle and H. H. Johnson. Strong delegations came from Quincy and from Jacksonville.

E. E. Crabtree's annual oration was a real jolly for the group system and the Illinois association.

Chicago Clearings

The North Avenue State Bank has increased its annual rate from 5 per cent to 6 per cent.

Elmer E. Black

The untimely death of Elmer E. Black in New York, last week, will be regretted by hosts of Chicago friends where he resided before going to New York two years ago. Mr. Black was the managing partner of Harris & Co., New York, and his death came while his friends and associates were at a banquet, planned largely by himself. He had gone to a hospital a few days before for a small operation, when blood poisoning set in and could not be checked. The serious nature of his condition was not known in time to postpone the banquet and he died while his friends sat around the table.

The Climax Bank of Climax

The beautiful, high-sounding title of the private bank—"The Climax Bank of Climax"—did not take it out of its class. It lived and died without inspection, supervision or a doctor. When the president left the state of Georgia he left just 56 cents with which to pay the depositors.

Group Four

Elgin, June 2.—Group Four, Illinois, met here to-day in a most successful convention, it being their third anniversary only. One hundred and fifty bankers signed the register. Charles N. Stevens, Evanston; Otto J. Gondorf, Ralph C. Wilson, Colin S. Campbell, W. G. Edens, Oscar G. Foreman and R. L. Rinaman, Chicago, were other speakers.

The convention approved judicious advertising in a discussion of that subject, and passed resolutions favoring a change in the present system of state bank examination.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

DESERVING people in one of the smallest Iowa towns have been receiving sums of money anonymously, but by "bank draft," recently and there is much pondering and wondering about the source. Think it over, you bankers, you know the little town and a "big banker" who had his beginnings there. That oughtn't to keep you long in the guessing line.

THE American Bankers Association does a mighty lot of quiet, effective work of which the public never knows. One day last week a purchaser of stock in a new trust company enterprise in Chicago went into a large trust company in the metropolis of an adjoining state, with it, to make inquiries. The president of that particular trust company is on the A. B. A. council and on a committee appointed to report on just such new enterprises. He at once called up Chicago to make inquiries.

THE information he got decided for him, promptly, and he said as he hung up the long distance, "I'll be in Chicago this p. m., and if all is not right they can't continue to sell shares to our customers." He also intimated that the A. B. A. will take a quiet hand in the matter.

THE thing may be all right and if so no harm can come of an investigation. An investigator, bearing A. B. A. credentials will be kindly received in any honorably intentioned organization, for it is quite as ready to help and to protect the legitimate as expose the wrong and warn the public. This is why no honorable enterprise, even in its promotional period, has anything to fear from an injury by an A. B. A. representative.

THERE are mighty few dead ones on the big council. Most of them will do just as he has done, to whom reference is made above. No inconvenience, expense or labor is spared where the safety or honor of the banking craft is at stake. Being right at the start there is little wonder that all the ex-members are so loyal to each other and to the A. B. A. That's why the Council Club, to hold its first meeting at the Chicago convention in September, is such an important body of men.

NO fraternity, not even the oath bound, can compare in its advantages to a membership in the Council Club. There isn't a city of any size where the best men and best bankers cannot point to an ex-councilman among their number. The bond is absolute.

THE new club stationery gotten out by Secretary Ingwersen is very handsome. The cut above will show the button or seal to be right in design and up to A. B. A. standards. Chairman Fenton, of the banquet committee, has put his house in order and the Council Club banquet, at the Chicago convention, will be the event of the big meeting. You can be assured of this. The attendance promises to be practically unanimous.

TAKE our word for it that the Rustlers Steel Golf Club, advertised in this paper, will improve your game. The firm is of the highest character and willing to demonstrate its claims.

A HANDSOME booklet on "East St. Louis—past, present and future" containing an address by H. D. Sexton, president of the Southern Illinois National, of that city, before the Commercial Club, is being sent out as a "city document." It belongs necessarily to the "boom" class of literature but will be interesting to bankers in the entire state. The banker who doesn't study and believe in the enterprises and resources of his own city should move out.

"IT was only a few years ago" says Mr. Sexton, "that many people employed in East St. Louis lived and were counted in St. Louis. I call your attention to the great change which has taken place in that earlier condition. East St.

Louisians by day have become East St. Louisians by night. More people are employed in St. Louis and live in East St. Louis now than are employed in East St. Louis and live in St. Louis. That may be called striking a balance in our favor. It is a balance which is sure to grow. It is a factor in our future we have not hitherto taken into account. Not hundreds but thousands and tens of thousands will find it more comfortable and more economical to have their homes on this side of the river."

"EAST ST. LOUIS is now placed by the census officials in the class of cities between 25,000 and 50,000 population. It is my prediction that the next census will place us formally in the class of cities of between 50,000 and 100,000. In fact, we have already passed the 50,000 and need only the confirmation of the census enumeration to be placed where we belong."

R. S. HECHT of New Orleans, formerly well known and well liked in Chicago chapter circles, has sent out the first number of a new monthly banking journal, "The Gulf States Banker." The first copy promises well, as first numbers go, being necessarily less complete than those which will follow. Southern bankers cannot complain, they now have more banking papers "devoted" to their interests than any other section of the republic.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION at Decatur, October 12th and 13th, is the bulletin sent out by Secretary Rinaman. October 12th is a state holiday for banks and that ought to help out the attendance. The Decatur bankers are the kind that do things and those who attend will not regret it. The association will show a stronger front than ever in its history, and probably will take the Iowa banner from the Dinwiddie camp for the largest association.

C. J. WEISER of Decorah, Iowa, has been elected on the board of the "Iowa Childrens Home Society," an institution which provided for 485 children the past year. It is said that Mr. Weiser will devote his energies toward providing a "home" for crippled children not readily taken for adoption in private homes.

Banking Conditions in California

President Jos. D. Radford reviews the situation in an able address at the Del Monte Convention. ❁ ❁

We meet to-day as the fifteenth annual convention of the California Bankers Association. A glance about us demonstrates that with the increase of years there has come a corresponding growth in membership, and that to-day our association has a larger place in the commercial life of the state than ever before. The calendar may say it is a full year since our meeting in Pasadena, but it has been a year so full of activities that it scarce seems one-half that lapse of time. No year in the history of our association has seen as much crowded into it as we have been compelled by circumstances to force into the banking year of 1908.

Almost as soon as we had adjourned, came the usual activities along political lines; and almost before fully aware of the fact, we were in the midst of a presidential campaign. The experiences of 1907 had given every man connected with our craft, from the active officer down to the humble clerk, a well defined desire to do his full duty towards hastening a return of our former prosperity. If there is anything in our national life that is well defined and clear cut beyond the shadow of a doubt, it is the fact that we prefer politics to prosperity. We have come to count it a thing to be expected that every presidential year shall be a poor business year. The year 1908 was no exception to our expectations if compared with the average year; but when compared with its predecessor, 1907, it was the very height of prosperity. Deposits in the banks have grown to equal the highest figures formerly reached, and have even advanced beyond them; but this increase does not mean that we have reached the former measure of prosperity. All banks are carrying larger reserves than has ever been considered necessary. This is partly because of a lack of good short-time loans, and partly because of the lesson so well learned in 1907. Projects that suffered no lack of supporters two years ago, are now denied a full hearing. This is only one of the channels through which we are making it plain to the world that some lessons of 1907 are well learned. All banking is conducted along much more conservative lines, and the short cuts to prosperity have been greatly reduced in numbers. The craft is almost as old as human history, and the pathway for safe conduct of the business is along certain well defined lines, and is so clearly marked, and so thoroughly tested, it seems strange that any could be deceived. And yet in the midst of such a period of prosperity as marked the history of the United States from 1890 to 1907, the banker may be pardoned for allowing himself to be carried along with the prevailing trend of affairs. In 1890 the total banking power of the whole world amounted to thirty-two billions of dollars, of which amount about fifteen billions were in our own country. In 1907 the banking power of our own country was thirty-two billions, while that of the rest of the world had only increased to forty odd billions. It is not surprising that in the midst of such an astonishing growth the banker should be optimistic and lose some of his old preconceived ideas of conservatism.

The emergency currency bill, passed at the last meeting of congress, has been subject to many attacks, and its efficacy is held in serious question by many bankers. It seems to have been hastily conceived and rushed through more as a party measure, than to meet the demands of our pressing needs. That our currency needs additional elasticity, no one questions; but that this bill provides that need, finds a great many doubters. For one, I am inclined to reserve my decision until we have a full report from the monetary commission appointed by President Roosevelt. The personnel of the commission is very high; they are men of varied experience, thoroughly versed in the rules of good banking. They have taken the matter in hand in a businesslike way; have examined in person the different systems in vogue in Europe; have made an analysis of our own conditions, and are taking a sufficient length of time, and have gained a view point far enough away from sectional conditions to entitle their recommendations to serious consideration. Their report will probably not be made before the latter part of the present year. The task committed to these gentlemen is not an easy one, and they are compelled to consider the needs of every part of the land; the South, with its cotton; New England, with its manufacturing; the middle west, with its agricultural products; and the Pacific coast with its fruit and lumber. Every section has its problem, and must have consideration. In the end we must be content to let the old principle of "the greatest good to the greatest number" be their controlling thought. Whether their recommendation will be an asset currency; a bond secured currency, or a central bank issue, we can only guess; but considering the personnel of the commission, and their well known conservative ideas, I shall not be surprised to find that they are for a central bank of issue. Considering our various needs, and the gradual reduction of our national debt, represented by our bonds, this would seem to be the most reasonable and logical scheme yet suggested. It follows more closely the European standard, where the idea has had a thorough trial; has been tested as only time can test; has served its purpose through war and through peace, in times of prosperity and through times of adversity; and in every way has served its purpose well. There seems to be no reasonable doubt but that, under our western civilization, the same scheme would serve us equally well. That some radical change is a crying demand, none of us question, and the only point at issue is as to what change will best suit our economic conditions. This is a large question and the ordinary banker is more concerned and occupied with the ever recurring questions of the daily conduct of his business, and it is only once in a great while that he finds time and inclination to study those larger, and so less personal, questions.

Another cause tending to retard the return of our much desired prosperity is the fact that the party in power had pledged itself to tariff revision. For several years we have found a growing deficit each year; the needs of the government could not be curtailed; the income must be increased; the business community expected a fulfillment of pre-election promises. The natural hesitancy among manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, and even the consumer, leads to a stagnation in business very perceptible; but congress has taken the question up with a determination to act promptly. The bill introduced by Representative Payne is estimated to produce an increase of revenue of about $50,000,000—the larger part of this coming from luxuries and inheritances. The bill further provides for a considerable reduction on what might be called the necessities of life. This tinkering with the tariff is a serious question, and upon the proper determination of reductions rests the success or failure of many industries. And yet there is an amusing side to the question. During the time the tariff bill was under discussion, the papers were filled with arguments as to why the rate should be maintained on this article and reduced on all others. Every interest seemed willing that the whole list should suffer sweeping reductions, if only his interest could remain at its present rate, or obtain a slight increase. It is quite like the man, of whom Artemus Ward tells, who wanted an appointive office and when told that he had never done much for his party, pleaded guilty to the charge, but said he was willing now to do anything to show his loyalty, and he would begin by sacrificing all of his wife's relations. When the tariff question is settled, we may expect to see trade return to its usual channels, and in the near future assume its usual volume. In twelve months we will have forgotten that the rates have been changed; we will pay the new rate resting upon what we consume, and be none the poorer for the change. There are some very strange things connected with our tariff bills. Often a reduction of the rates on a given article will increase the receipts two or three-fold, because its importation has been stimulated. A gradual reduction of the rate, as the industry grows and is able to defend itself in the markets of the world, seems a reasonable proposition; and in the present bill this seems to have been the thought in the mind of its framers.

The whole world is watching with much interest our progress on the Panama Canal. The work is moving along better than expected, and 1914 has now been set for the time of its completion. The item of its probable cost shows an inclination to increase as the work goes on; difficulties arise that could not have been foreseen; and changes in the original plans have had something to do with the larger cost. Its completion means much to the Pacific coast, and especially to the state of California. All of our products are compelled to submit to a heavy carrying charge, which is paid by the producer. Shorten the distance to the market, or reduce the freight, and you have turned into his hands the difference. California has area enough, and tillable land enough, to support a population of ten millions, where we have less than two. The cost of the canal, to the present writing, is less than one hundred million dollars, and whatever may be the final figures to complete the task, California, by position and by productions, stands first in benefits to be derived. While some may question the wisdom of the improvement, as compared to the expense, a few years of enjoyment of the added transportation facilities, perceptible reduction of freight charges on our produce will demonstrate the far-seeing judgment of the United States in taking over the scheme after it had proved a failure in the hands of others.

when this bank was founded, Conestoga Wagons were used for conveying families and their household goods from one point to another; the first railroad was not built until 1830. It is now 99 years since The Bank of Pittsburgh was founded, and it has been in continuous existence ever since, uninterrupted by the violent financial disturbances of the past century, and constantly increasing its resources and ability to serve its patrons. It desires to extend its collection facilities and its business with other banks and invites correspondence.

All the forces are still at work that contributed to our former prosperity, and notwithstanding the drawbacks and impediments, these same forces are bound to bring about a return of conditions which prevailed before our troubles of 1907. The return may be delayed, but not for long; and let us hope that, profiting by past experiences, we may be better able to conserve and foster our good fortune.

One of our present day problems is the proposed postal savings bank. It has strong advocates, and most arguments against it are liable to be attributed to self interest. To the present writing the great mass of the people seem indifferent to the measure and most of the arguments in favor of such a government institution comes from the politicians. Later in our meeting we are to have a paper on this subject by one far better qualified to argue the question, and so I am inclined to give the proposed measure only passing mention.

A most hopeful sign of the time, and a reflection of the well learned lesson of 1907, is the recent stand taken by the comptroller of currency in the matter of examination of national banks. He lays down the rule that examiners must get closer to the loans and assets of banks than ever before. He propounds a set of questions to be asked of every board of directors upon the advent of the examiner. The examiners have been severely criticised, and the objection urged that the very questions presupposed that the average director is a rascal. The questions are searching, but they do not impugn the director's honesty any more than does the fundamental idea of an examination at all. The effect will be good, and the average business man who is on a board of directors will familiarize himself more perfectly with the internal workings of his institution. When that is done, the end desired by the comptroller has been attained. The very criticism urged against the new rules will be productive of good, and in the end we can expect to see better talent as examiners, and so better results from the examinations. The move is in the right direction, and has the full approval of every thoughtful man, whether inside of a bank counter, or on the outside.

Two great tasks contemplated by the leading cities of our state are of more than local interest, because whatever benefits San Francisco and Los Angeles must prove a help to every community however remote from these centers of population. I refer to the proposed plan of supplying San Francisco and the cities around the bay with an abundant water supply from the high Sierras, from Hetch-Hetchy. The proposal is staggering in its immensity, and the simple thought of it reflects credit on the enterprise and progressiveness of those who dwell by the Golden Gate. The second task is only a little less bewildering in its magnitude. It is the furnishing of Los Angeles with an adequate water supply from Owens River—a distance of two hundred eighty miles. The latter project is well under way, and the work may be completed in the next four or five years. We can gain some faint conception of the vastness of these projects when we know that they will cost, when completed, over fifty million of dollars. They are so important to these cities that even these figures do not cause one moment of hesitation.

At the outset I made the statement that circumstances had forced into the past year more than its usual quota of activities. When we met in Pasadena a year ago, two committees were appointed that were of more than ordinary importance. One of these was a committee to report a plan for a state clearing house association. Under their direction the state was districted into eleven divisions, and the work of education was begun. Most of the districts were organized, and the machinery gotten into shape to begin actual work, if that seemed advisable. The work done by the committee will be more fully covered in the report of that body, but I feel that in passing the members of the committee are entitled to warm words of commendation for what they have wrought. Their task has not been a pleasant one; in some districts they have encountered a great deal of opposition. But in the main their labors bear abundant fruit, and they are entitled to the praise and thanks of this organization.

The foundation is prepared for a highly beneficial innovation in banking lines. The clearing house associations in San Francisco and Los Angeles recognize the need of the protection afforded to its members, and have each instituted its own system of examination. The passage, and carrying into effect, of the new banking law may have a tendency to remove some of the necessities for a state clearing house association, as originally outlined.

The most important work accomplished by our association during the last year has been the result of the labor of the legislative committee. This committee came into existence by action of the association at Pasadena in last May, and in answer to a universal demand from bankers and commercial men from every portion of the state. The disastrous failure of the California Safe Deposit and Trust Co., in San Francisco, brought forcibly to mind the need of some system of bank supervision that would be more effective than the one formerly in force. An investigation of the affairs of the closed institution revealed the fact that the bank had been in poor condition for years; that the deposits had been used systematically for fostering enterprises in which its officers were interested. If the examinations disclosed this state of affairs, no adequate means seem to have been used to discontinue the practice. And so it ran on from year to year; growing more and more hopelessly involved. Finally, when the crisis came in 1907, the bank was forced to close its doors, and a stigma was cast on every bank in the state of California. This is where we stood at the time of our convention in May last, when a committee was created to confer with a committee appointed by Gov. James H. Gillett from the state legislature. Numerous meetings were held in San Francisco, and the entire field of banking activity was canvassed; every provision of the new law was discussed.

That the committee did its work well is evidenced by the fact that the bill as drafted by them was practically the same as the one passed by the legislature; almost no change being suggested when it came up for discussion. The work of this committee must form an important topic in our proceedings at this convention, and as the whole matter is to be presented in papers later, I am restrained from saying more on the subject. One thing, however, I feel should be said. When the committee came into existence no provision was made for compensating them for their expenses incurred in attending the different meetings. Without expectation of repayment they gave their time and best efforts, and the least we can do is to see that they are repaid their actual traveling expenses. I trust that, at some stage of our meeting, this will come before you in proper form; and I bespeak your hearty support of any measure to that end.

Since our last convention, our association has continued to grow, and our membership is now five hundred twenty; yet a list of non-member banks shows that there are one-hundred twenty banks and branch banks in the state outside of our rolls. Fully one-half of this number are savings banks which are conducted by commercial banks—the latter being members of our association. Most of them are of such size that they could become members upon the payment of five dollars per year. This seems a reasonable fee when you consider the work being done by our protective committee, and that more and more the presence of our membership card at the wick-

Bank Expansion in Illinois

Joliet, June 1.—This city is having a period of bank expansion. The Joliet Safe Deposit Company, formed to bring about the construction of "The Woodruff Building," a new office structure at the northeast corner of Jefferson and Chicago streets, on the site of the old Abbott block, has been fully organized with a capital stock of $150,000.

At the same time announcement was made that work on the building which, when completed, will be one of the finest of its kind in the United States, will be begun July 1st, and that it is expected to be completed and ready for occupancy March 1st, 1910.

The first board of directors of the company with the exception of two members comprises Joliet residents and consists of the following: George Woodruff, Adam Groth, F. W. Woodruff, C. A. Groth, C. E. Woodruff, Fred Bennitt, Robert Pilcher, J. G. Heggie, Joseph H. Ray of Wilmington and A. B. Scully of Chicago. Each of the directors will own one-tenth of the new building.

On the very same day the Joliet Trust & Savings Bank and the Joliet Title & Guaranty Co. were announced, followed by the election of officers and directors. A clause in the by-laws of the Title & Guaranty company provides that the same officers and directors manage both companies and resulted in the election of the same men for similar positions in both institutions.

The following were elected:

President, Archibald J. McIntyre.

Vice-president, Thomas F. Donovan.

Cashier, Ervin T. Geist.

Directors: Archibald J. McIntyre, Adam Groth, George A. Barr, Thomas F. Donovan, Frederick W. Werner, Charles E. Woodruff, Jacob Adler, Jr., Joseph H. Ray, Carl Ehrhardt, Fred Bennitt and Ervin T. Geist.

McIntyre has been cashier of the First National at Wilmington for 25 years and is said to be the richest man in Will county.

The object of the Joliet Trust & Savings Bank is to do a regular banking business, especially that part which pertains to savings accounts. Three per cent interest will be paid on all savings deposits. The company also will make, buy and sell real estate mortgages and deal in gilt-edged securities, such as municipal and other well-protected bonds. The company has 100 stockholders and is capitalized at $100,000.

The Joliet Title & Guarantee company, with a capital stock of $50,000 has the same officers, directors and quarters as the Joliet Trust & Savings Bank. This will mean that the two companies will act in unison, and that they will divide the expenses of operation.

The quarters of both companies will be in the building about to be vacated by the First National Bank. The place is to be renovated, remodeled and repaired, being made into one of the most modern in the county.

The object of this company is to issue abstracts and guarantee them. The same system is in operation in Cook County, but not in Will County. It will fill a long-felt want. This guaranty will protect the buyer as well as the seller.

At Par and Accrued Interest

Mr. Perry, Chicago Manager for Swartout & Appenzeller, has information that Mr. Swartout has purchased a membership on the New York Stock Exchange and that they will open a stock department here in the near future. The Chicago office will be in charge of Mr. Perry, an expert in such matters.

Two good live bond salesman, E. A. Garard and C. R. Pierce, both of H. T. Holtz & Co., attended the group meeting at Beardstown, Ill., where they found business good.

Mr. Jarnigan, of the Hamilton National, attended the convention at Chattanooga, Tenn., where he reported a very good time. The cashier, Mr. Meyer, attended the group convention at Clinton, Iowa.

Warren Furbeck, of Rudolph Kleybolte & Co., states that his firm has had a better business than usual, although it is generally reported that business has been dull for the past few weeks. He thinks that eventually there will be a very good market for the sale of the irrigation bond issues.

New Blood in Commercial National

More than 1,000 shares of Commercial National, Chicago, formerly held by an inactive estate, have been transferred to active business men at around $300, at which the yield is 4 per cent. It is expected that the bank will benefit from their connection with the institution. The sale was conducted by Babcock, Rushton & Co. The deal is one of the largest in bank stocks recently handled, involving more than $300,000 in cash. Holders ask $310 for the shares with $300 being offered.

Jas. T. Bradley on Bank Administration by Directors

Important and instructive paper on a vital topic by an ex-bank examiner, now cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, in Kansas City, before the Kansas Convention at Wichita.

In discussing this subject before the bankers of Kansas I can do no more than emphasize the law, which imposes upon bank directors, both national and state, the duties of administering the affairs of their respective banks. To the fact that the duty has not been fully performed in the past, is due the present agitation of the question and the general interest in it. It can be said to be a "live question." Bank commissioners; state legislatures quite generally; the comptroller of the currency, as evidenced by his famous twenty-nine questions to the directors of national banks; the currency commission; conventions of bankers, and the common people have all been thinking about and discussing this very subject.

All banks in this state are corporations, and as such are required by law to be administered by a board of directors of not less than five persons. The national bank act explicitly provides that "the affairs of each association shall be managed by not less than five directors" and the state banking law, not less explicitly says, "the affairs and business of any banking corporation doing business under this act shall be managed and controlled by a board of directors, not less than five nor more than thirteen in number." Thus the law has unequivocally placed upon directors in this state the duty of managing her banks, and to make that duty all the more impressive, every director before entering upon his office must take and subscribe to an oath, which in case of a national bank is as follows: "I, the undersigned director of the ..... bank of ..... in the state of Kansas, being a citizen of the United States and the state of ....., do solemnly swear that I will so far as the duty devolves upon me, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of said association; and that I will not knowingly violate, or willingly permit to be violated, any of the provisions of the statutes of the United States, under which said association has been organized." And in case of a state bank the following oath must be taken and subscribed, to wit: "I will so far as the duty devolves upon me, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of such bank, and will not knowingly or willingly permit to be violated any of the provisions of the law."

Therefore it is difficult to conceive of an obligation more binding than that assumed by bank directors to diligently and honestly manage the affairs of their banks.

That it is the plain, expressed and sworn duty of directors to manage the affairs of their respective banks there cannot be the shade of doubt. It then becomes a question as to the character and extent of the duty. In considering the case it becomes necessary to first inquire into the origin of corporations; second, into the superiority of joint management as compared with individual management; third, into the extent and manner of management by directors, and fourth, as to the liability of directors for mismanagement.

First: The idea of corporations had its origin in a desire to perpetuate a business or an enterprise. This could not be done under individual or partnership ownership. For if the owner died his business stopped with his death. If a partner died the partnership business stopped until his interest therein could be legally determined and eliminated, or the future ownership legally settled. To perfect an organization capable of lawfully continuing a business uninterruptedly became the problem which was solved by the Romans in the early centuries. Not only the idea but the legal status of the corporations was clearly worked out. "As a ship remains the same ship although all its parts be gradually renewed by successive repairs; as a human body remains the same body although waste and repairs periodically change all its minutest particles; so a body of human beings, like a bench of judges, a legion of the Roman people, remains the same body in spite of all changes in composition." Modern civil law accepts substantially the Roman conception of a corporation. The English common law recognizes three distinct factors as essential to the existence of a corporation; first, one or more natural persons who are the incorporators or members; second, one or more trustees, managers or directors who have general control of the affairs; third, the artificial person, or corporation created by the fiat of the law, and always separate and distinct from its stockholders and directors. This country has accepted the English common law provisions as to the three-fold character of corporations and recognizes universally the second factor, that of management by trustees or directors, acting as a body, and never as individuals. Since it is not always convenient or expedient for a board of directors to remain in session, and since the board can only act as a body it becomes necessary to devise a method to conduct the business in the intervals between board meetings. This is accomplished by selecting officers whose duties are defined by by-laws adopted in this state by the directors. It will be noted the members or stockholders of the corporation select the directors, who, as heretofore made plain, are clothed with the duty of managing its affairs, and that the directors select the officers and define their duties; hence the officers are responsible to the directors, but are not substituted for them in the management although in practice such is often the case, and herein lies the trouble and the ground for criticism and complaint. Still the practice is more or less excusable for several reasons. Directors as a rule act without pay, while officers receive salaries, at least those who are actively employed. Directors, as a rule, meet periodically and spend but a few hours at a session, while active officers are on duty constantly. So many directors are not familiar with banking methods and have no practical knowledge of bookkeeping and accounts, while active officers are supposed to have, and should have an understanding of both. Many of the directors own but a small interest in the bank as compared with their other interests. Many feel they have not the time to spare from other business engagements, and many are selected for their financial or personal standing in the community and are induced to qualify with the understanding that little of their time will be required, that it seems almost a natural consequence that the management should be left to the officers. This result has so plainly been the tendency that we may well be excused for inquiring if there are not some serious defects in the system of constituting boards' directors. They should at least be chosen with the express understanding that they can and will perform the duty of the office, and that they should be paid for the service rendered.

I know from experience that these two conditions fulfilled have procured a regular attendance at regular board meetings.

Second: Superiority of joint management as compared with individual management. There is an old saying that "in a multitude of council there is wisdom," or in the Anglo-Saxon version of the same idea, "two heads are better than one, even if one is a sheep's head." Too much knowledge, information and experience cannot be brought to bear in the management of banks and certainly no one will deny that in the peculiar information needed by the banker a board of several persons possess more of it than one or two persons, or that the common judgment of several minds is not more accurate in general practice than that of one mind.

This is the generally accepted idea and is no doubt the reason why in providing for the management of corporations several directors are prescribed. Aside from this there is a stronger reason which may be classed as psychological. A single person in control for a long time is apt to drift into the notion that he has rights superior to those in common ownership and to accord to himself benefits not legally or rightfully his. In other words to use for his own personal aggrandisement the trust which should be administered for the equal benefit of the stockholders. Or he may extend favors imprudently or excessively to friends or interests not entitled thereto. He may even dishonestly abuse his trust, when if others were to be jointly consulted he would be restrained from indiscretion. I do not pretend, however, to affirm that there are no instances where one man management is not capable, honest and efficient; or that there are not cases where a strong intellect and forceful personality has so completely dominated his board that the management amounted to one man control. What I do assert is that in general practice it is wiser and safer to manage our banks as the laws provide.

Third: The extent and character of management by directors. In the consideration of this branch of the subject I am going to concede without reservation that officers as a body are capable, prudent, honest, industrious, efficient, high minded and earnestly desirous to be successful. Hence they can be trusted. Their duties, however, are essentially executive. The routine of every day's business must be left to them, and while the directors have the right to dictate or approve the plan of organization and general system employed in carrying on effectively the bank's business, the officers must furnish the plans and execute them. They must have the custody and care of the bank's assets and books and keep the records and accounts. They must meet the bank's patrons and deal with them. They must make up the reports, attend to the clerical work and employ the necessary help. Officers' duties are of two kinds: all those prescribed by law, and all those prescribed by the by-laws and directors. The directors in managing and administering the business and the affairs of the bank employ the officers as a means to accomplish the purpose, and should see that the officers are effectively carrying out that purpose.

In enumerating the duties of directors in detail, it becomes necessary to consider conditions. The same plan of management is not practical in all banks, but we can divide the banks into three general classes in making application of as many different plans.

1st: Banks of such size and having such a volume of business that it is practical to have daily board meetings.

2d: Those in which it is practical to have a committee of the board meet daily with the officers, and the full board meet weekly or bi-monthly.

3d: Those in which it is most practical and only necessary to have regular monthly meetings.

Under any plan it is necessary for the board to become familiar with the bank's business in general at least, more especially the kind and character of its investments, which constitute much the greater volume of its assets. Every director should satisfy himself, not take it for granted, that the bank's condition is sound.

As an illustration only of the manner in which the duties of the board may be performed in the first class of banks I will, with your forbearance, relate briefly the proceedings of a board meeting in the National Bank of Commerce, Kansas City, Missouri. The board of directors of this bank is composed of twenty-one members, and there is an average attendance of fourteen at the daily meetings, excepting Saturday. The meetings begin promptly at eleven o'clock and last until the business is dispatched. The minutes of the last meeting are first read, corrected and approved. Next the offerings of all new paper for discount and applications for loans and renewals are passed upon. Then the maturities for a week hence are read and such notations made as are deemed advisable. New lines of credit are granted and old ones modified. The notes paid or renewed the previous day are read and any new developments are discussed; reports of committees are acted upon and new committees appointed if needed to investigate any matter; daily statement of the bank's condition is examined and new business planned for; general conditions of business, growing crops and markets are talked over; financial statements of customers are considered; special reports of officers are made; in fact every phase of the business is considered and the board is kept familiar with all essential features of the business. I am personally satisfied it is a winning policy. In this way directors become individually interested and their personal influence secured in behalf of the bank. A committee of the board meeting daily with the officers should go through practically the same routine, and make written report of the general business of the interim.

In cases where monthly meetings are held a general review of the business since the preceding meeting should be submitted, considered carefully and approved or exceptions made and entered of record.

The duties above outlined are those performed while in session around the directors' table. Still others are incumbent on them in order to ascertain the bank's true condition and correct disorders. Examinations must be made periodically by a committee of the board, three or four a year, four being required by the state law, and by having as many directors as possible present at examinations by federal and state examiners. A written report of these examinations should be made to the board and filed for reference, and any abuses or irregularities should be corrected.

Fourth: The liability of directors for mismanagement. There is no question at all that directors are financially liable personally for violations of the law resulting in loss to the bank of which they have knowledge, or could have knowledge with reasonable diligence. The degree of diligence required "is that which men of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances," and becomes a question of fact to be decided by court and jury. Ignorance is not excusable if it is the result of gross inattention. In Boyd vs. Schneider, 131 Federal Reports, page 223, it is held that depositors in a national bank may maintain an action against directors to recover for losses caused by negligent performance of their duties as such directors and state courts are usually more exacting in cases of this character than federal courts. Here, the right, and safe course, for directors in such banks is to perform their full duty diligently and cheerfully.

Should Public Tests of Bank Safes be Commended or Condemned?

A circular, which by reason of the expert skill of the printer presented an attractive appearance, reached the writer a short time ago, and after reading it carefully in all its details and closely noting the pictures shown in the said circular, caused the idea to suggest itself that probably and possibly a serious mistake had unconsciously been made by advertising broadcast the contents of the circular referred to.

One of the pictures shows a bank safe whose appearance, added to the reputation of its builder, whose name was set forth, indicated beyond all doubt that it was drill proof, explosive proof; in fact was burglar proof. Pressure bar systems, time-locks, locking devices attached to both outer and inner doors, all lent color to the belief that he who would attack such a safe as the one shown in said picture would have his labor for naught.

Another view shown in this circular was of a party of gentlemen made up of some seven or eight bankers, three or four men representing several safe companies, and a group of several outsiders drawn to the scene from curiosity.

Why this gathering?

A statement has been made by the representative of a safe building company, who was a competitor of the builder of the safe shown in the circular. The statement questioned the amount of burglar resistance the safe in question presented. Results, a test arranged for the purpose of showing the defects in the construction of the safe.

The bankers in attendance lent authenticity to the test, and they testified over their signatures, which also appear on the circular in question, that the statements made in connection with the test that had been made are absolutely correct.

What are the statements?

Safe is shown to be of the highest grade of the —Safe & Lock Company's product. It was in perfect working order at the time test was started. It was locked up when attacked. The party who made the test used such and such tools. He applied said tools at a particular point of safe that is minutely described and located. He used such and such quantity of explosives that are also described as to kind and quantity, and he succeeded in opening this supposed to be "Gibraltar-of-bank-safes, in about forty-three minutes. These statements in the face of the testimonials of those signing them, cannot be questioned.

The germane point in connection with this communication we now reach:

Should tests, such as the one described, conducted in public and described in detail be permitted by the authorities? Is there not a great danger that proficient and willing to be proficient burglars are apt to reach the conclusion that to open a bank safe of any make is not at all a difficult task?

The history of bank safes is that to build a safe that will resist any and all methods of burglarious attacks is a difficult proposition. Tests when conducted in the manner above described may produce injury to the community at large rather than benefit. Tests and describing minutely the ways and means employed to successfully attack bank safes is a subject that should not be passed over too lightly.

It is the opinion of the writer that it would be a logical conclusion to avoid educating the would-be or graduated proficient bank burglar. He might be an apt scholar.

Without the presence of the bankers these tests would never be pulled off. Why? Because the winner in the combat expects to sell the product of his factory to banks. If the "tests" were witnessed only by safe manufacturers and their representatives the cry of "fraud" would be heard every time an assertion was made by a rival.

It is claimed by the victorious safe man that it is for the sole benefit of the banker that these tests are made. Safe manufacturers and their craftsmen are employed to ascertain just where the weak points are in the product of a competing safe builder—all for the benefit of the banker.

I am looking for another circular soon which will give in detail just how the safe, built by the winner of the same bout, was converted into junk by the loser of the last scrap. I won't be disappointed.

Permit me to suggest that it would be better for bankers who have nothing better to do than to lend their presence, their testimony, etc., and to acting as referees in a fight between safe men, to pick out a place where a good healthy, uplifting dog fight is to be pulled off and attend that festival instead.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

J. B. Galarneault, of Aitkin, is said to be the man that Governor John Johnson has picked out for the head of the new state department of banking in Minnesota. The law is effective August 1st and it is reported at the capital that the appointment of the superintendent may be expected at any time. Mr. Galarneault is a state banker and a member of the state highway commission. Five bankers were endorsed for the position by the executive committee of the Minnesota Bankers Association, and it is said that the name of the man supposed to be chosen was not on the list. Joseph Chapman, Jr., president of the association, says that the names of the men suggested will not be made public. The indorsement was a confidential matter, he said, for the assistance of the governor, but there was no desire to embarrass the governor in any way. Mr. Chapman said he should consider Mr. Galarneault a good man for the place.

S. B. Duea Speaks

S. B. Duea of the First National Bank of Ruthton, Minn., gave a resume of the banking legislation in the state last winter at the Sleepy Eye group convention. His subject was "Legislative Problems Recently Created for the Bankers of Minnesota." In conclusion Mr. Duea said of the new laws:

"From an examination of these laws it will be found that provision has been made for sending everybody to the penitentiary but the bankers, which you have a right to take as a compliment by the legislature to yourselves. Former legislatures had fairly well taken care of that part of the law, and the fact that no bill was introduced during the whole session creating any penalty against those engaged in the banking business shows that during the recent past the banking business of this state has been carried on along proper business lines and that the people have had little to find fault with. It not only speaks well for the business, but well for the character of the parties engaged in it.

"Providing the separate department for banks of the state suggests another thought, namely, that banking has become a profession; something that requires more than the mere ability to count money, keep books, figure interest or draw a promissory note. Furthermore it suggests that while we have exclusive departments in our great university for fitting of men for the various professions, there is no department known as the department of banking, yet a proper course of instruction in banking would not only be a proper, but a much needed foundation for anyone about to engage in business, and such a department would add to the dignity of that great branch of our commercial industry.

"Originally the banker held a position of trust, but in modern times this trust has greatly increased and the fidelity shown generally in the business entitles them to this position and such profits as may rightfully accrue therefrom, and if the recent session of the legislature has done anything towards assisting the banks to a steadier and larger future, or has done something to protect them against the rascality of others, or to give the public more implicit faith in the banks as depositories for their wealth, I will feel grateful and highly repaid for being a member of that body."

Arranging Vaudeville Program

The arrangements committee of the Twin City Bankers' Association is working out the vaudeville program for the state convention meeting at Tonka Bay this month. The members of the committee admit that it is not so easy as it looks to get up a program that is worthy the visiting bankers. The Twin Cities are great vaudeville centers, and have several booking offices, but to get the right turn is something that takes a practiced hand.

Mr. Anderson served successively as teller, cashier, and president after his father died in 1902. The consolidation with the Capital National took place in 1906. ## New Bank for Watertown

A fourth bank is to be established at Watertown, S. D., with $50,000 capital. J. B. Sullivan of Minneapolis will be in charge, and is associated with Dr. F. H. Wellcome and Bert Winter of the Union Investment Company. The bank will open for business in a few days.

Banks Send Envoys to Montana

Three Minneapolis banks sent envoys on the special Commercial Club's business men's train to Montana and return this week. The excursion is under the auspices of the jobbing and manufacturing committee and the leading houses of the city sent representatives. The Minneapolis men met the Chicago Association of Commerce at Lewiston. The trip was to get the business men in touch with the new country on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul line, in which the bankers have an interest also. Stanley Bezoier represented the Security National bank; C. W. Farwell the Northwestern National, and H. A. Willoughby the First National. They will return to-morrow.

Banking Notes

Joseph Chapman, Jr., and George F. Orde represented the Northwestern National and the First National at the group convention at Cloquet last week. It was the second meeting of this group and proved interesting. George W. Eckstrand, assistant cashier, represented the Merchants' National at the Winona group meeting this week, and H. Van Vleck represented the bank at the Sauk Center meeting on the same days. Vice-President D. S. Culver of the German-American spent one day at each group meeting.

Listed on Stock Exchange

The stock of the new Scandinavian-American National Bank has been listed in the recently organized Minneapolis Stock Exchange. The membership is now seventeen, with a limit of twenty. The exchange reports an increased business in local securities since the exchange was organized. First National was asked at 230, Security National at 300, Northwestern at 250. One hundred shares of the latter was sold last week. Germania shares were offered at 140 and German-American buyers were looking for the stock at 240. Minneapolis and St. Paul gas-light bonds and the new bonds of the Chamber of Commerce memberships and in the chamber have been listed.

Work on Alterations Begun

Work has begun on the new Union State Bank quarters in the former Minneapolis Club Building. The alterations will cost about $25,000. Two large granite pillars will mark the entrance to the lobby. At the immediate right will be the officers' desks, next the receiving tellers, adjoining these the women's department and then the paying tellers. The directors will have their meeting room in the basement. The lockers, wash rooms and a lunch room will be in the basement. The bank will build a large two-story vault for both money and storage purposes.

Guaranty of Deposits Situation

In Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma the guaranty of deposits of recent political notoriety is being tried out in three different forms and the rest of the country, much of it disbelieving in the plan, will look on with interest. In Texas the inquiry at the banking department is so insistent that a general notice has been sent out to reassure the anxious. There is no haste. The new law will not go into effect until November 1st of this year. Texas, as it will be recalled, adopted a dual plan, banks to elect under which they will insure. There are possibly over a dozen state banks in the state that have either by wire or letter advised the department that they wish to take advantage of the assessment or guaranty fund plan. The latest of these is the First State Bank of Paris. The department also received a communication from the Ochiltree National Bank of Ochiltree, in which it says that it proposes to denationalize and reorganize as a state bank so that it can accept the assessment plan to secure depositors. The department has also received a letter from the First State Bank of Rodgers, Bell county, in which the bank declares that it wants to take advantage of both the bonding system and also the security fund plan and wanting to know if this were possible. This bank was advised that it could accept both plans but that it would place a double burden upon the institution, but that it would be a double security to the depositors.

In Oklahoma care is being taken, under the authority of the new law, that new banks are not allowed charters in towns where banking facilities are not required or have been adequately provided. Upon the faithfulness of this supervision and prevention much of the success of the guaranty law must depend.

Our inquiry to Bank Commissioner Dolley of Kansas, an alert and well qualified official, as to his personal opinion of the new law in his state brought prompt and emphatic response. He says: "Kansas guaranty law is right in principle and adequate as to the security of deposits. The people of Kansas demanded this protection, and they are entitled to it, and I trust every state bank will participate under the law and thereby make it a splendid success. Some of the strong features of the guaranty law are: (1) Ample bonds to secure the payment of all assessments. (2) Limited assessments per annum. (3) Interest-bearing certificates issued to creditors immediately upon the failure of the bank. (4) Payment in full of all deposits."

Further we are assured that the surety companies of the United States, including practically all of the wealthy companies, with assets aggregating about $40,000,000, have under consideration, according to a statement made by William B. Joyce, president of the National Surety Co., and a member of the committee of the companies to whom the matter is referred, a plan to overcome the disadvantage under which the national banks in the states of Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma are now laboring. The plan is to insure their deposits, but the details are not ready. The guaranty situation will continue interesting for some time. Abuse will not affect it.

The Packing Center of the World

Chicago is the packing center of the world just as much as it is the grain center. Some hope that it in time will be the central market for many other commodities just as it now is for meats and grain. The steel mills of the future must come here. The coal is close by and the ore can come by cheap water freight. Distribution from this point costs less than from any other. The deep waterway will bring the South American ports closer than to any rival city. The railroad development of the future will be on that hemisphere. But to get back to the title line. Chicago already is the world's packing center.

The four big Chicago packers, Swift, Armour, Morris, and Cudahy and their associate, the National Packing Company, do an annual gross business of nearly $800,000,000, a total greater than that of the Steel Corporation in its biggest year, 1907, when gross sales reached $757,000,000. It is now possible, owing to Massachusetts laws requiring full statements, for the first time in the history of the packing industry to get a close idea of the exact proportions of the business, the sales of the different companies for the last year being Swift, $250,000,000, Armour, $240,000,000, Morris, $110,000,000, Cudahy, $80,000,000, National Packing, $100,000,000.

Figures of National Packing sales are not official, as in the case of the other companies. They are, however, conservative, so that, based on the present volume of business handled by the Big Four, it is probable that the gross total will be found to exceed $800,000,000.

No business of any size is conducted with as little "protection" nor upon as close a margin. The packers command the best business men and the ablest of financiers or it could not be done.

The total net profits on this overturn of $800,000,000 will hardly reach $25,000,000, a margin of only 3 per cent. Compared with this the Steel Corporation in 1907 showed a balance of net, for interest and dividends, of $177,201,561, or 23 per cent, more than seven times the net profits of the packers. Hitherto the packers have turned their profits back into their business and have used their high credit to borrow in the aggregate scores of millions from the banks. The 1907 panic, involving as it did a wholesale calling in of bank loans, a general dumping over of millions of dollars of meats, cattle, hogs and packer collateral and a consequent tremendous drop in prices, taught the packers a severe lesson. This was the necessity of providing for a more permanent means of increasing working assets than bank loans. This, in part at least, is the explanation of the recently arranged packer financing.

Paid Secretary for New York

At the last convention of the New York State Bankers' Association, a committee was appointed to consider the question of making the secretaryship a salaried office. The members of this committee, James G. Cannon, of the Fourth National Bank, New York City; F. E. Lyford, First National Bank, Waverly, and M. S. Sandford, of the Geneva National Bank, Geneva, after a conference in New York City, unanimously decided to recommend that the association adopt the proposition. The recommendation will be submitted to a special meeting of the Council of Administration on June 8th. At that meeting the necessary change in the by-laws of the association will be adopted.

In making this important recommendation the committee suggests that the permanent office of the secretary be located at some point outside of New York City. And it is also suggested that the election for this office be made on the floor of the coming convention. The object is to make the field free for all that are qualified for the position. The larger purpose of the recommendation is to stimulate interest in the affairs of the association. It cannot be said that the conventions of the New York Bankers' Association have aroused the interest which the financial and banking importance of the state warrant. It is hoped that a permanent secretary will be able, by devoting all his time to the affairs of the association, not only to increase the membership, but to introduce a more progressive spirit among the various groups of the association.—Daily Banker.

The Underwriters Making Money

Since the first of January underwriting syndicates that succeeded in placing $250,000,000 new securities have been practically wound up at profits ranging from moderate to huge. The transactions thus closed included the $44,500,000 operations in Southern Pacific bonds, the $21,333,000 of Southern Railways, a $30,000,000 issue by the Frisco and a number of industrials in which the Armour Packing Company may be embraced, since that emission is acknowledged to be an unqualified success.

All these flotations, in addition to numerous less important ones, have returned a sufficient profit to make them compensate the underwriters for the disastrous syndicate venture of two years ago. The participants in this year's syndicates have aimed chiefly for quick profits and small risks. There has been none of the gambling spirit of 1901, when the bankers took great risks to earn exorbitant fees.

John Tilley, president of the People's Savings Bank, Holyoke, Mass., has tendered his resignation.

New York Savings Bank Association

The annual meeting of the Savings Bank Association of the state of New York was held last week at Chamber of Commerce. The keynote of the several addresses made was the present high rate of interest allowed on deposits. The unanimous opinion was that a continuation of the present rate was detrimental, not only to the savings banks themselves, but also to the depositor in the end. The proposed amendment to the constitution of the state raising the debt limit of New York City was also roundly assailed.

The following officers were elected: President, Thos. M. Mulry of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, to succeed Charles A. Miller; first vice-president, Walter Trimble of the Bank of Savings; second vice-president, Chas. B. Hanaman of the Troy Savings Bank; third vice-president, William Felsingier of the New York Savings Bank; treasurer, Samuel D. Styles of the North River Savings Bank, re-elected; secretary, Jonathan D. Curry of the Metropolitan Savings Bank, to succeed W. F. Patterson; executive committee, William C. Conklin of the Franklin Savings Bank; W. P. Sturgis of the Dime Savings Bank, and E. P. Maynard, comptroller of the Brooklyn Savings Bank.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., June 2.—Union Securities Company of Spokane has been incorporated under the laws of Washington with a paid-up capital stock of $600,000 to deal in farm mortgages and furnish capital for country banks in the Inland Empire. The incorporators and trustees are D. W. Twohy, president of the Old National Bank; Jay P. Graves, president of the Spokane & Inland Empire Electric Railway system; F. A. Blackwell, president of the Idaho & Washington Northern Railway Company; T. J. Humbird, president of the Humbird Lumber Company; J. A. Caughren, John D. Porter, T. L. Greenough, Fred B. Grinnell and J. D. Bassett, president of the First National Bank of Ritzville, Wash., who will be manager of the institution. Other stockholders are former United States Senator Levi Ankeny, banker at Walla Walla, Wash., Peter Larson estate, Montana; L. E. Shields, St. Paul; Porter Brothers & Welch, J. D. Farrell, Seattle; Bassett & Prouty, A. Guthrie & Company, Caughren & Woldson, Winters, Boomer & Co., Twohy Brothers, J. P. McGoldrick, T. F. Wren, W. T. Clark of Wenatchee, Wash., and Henry Turrish of Duluth, Minn. D. W. Twohy announces that the principal office will be in Spokane, adding that because of the large and varied interests thus centralized, the company should become an important factor in the development of eastern Washington and Oregon, north and central Idaho and western Montana.

To Build Freight and Passenger Stations

Robert E. Strahorn of Spokane, president of the North Coast Railroad Company, which is believed to be the western end of a new transcontinental line, presumably the Chicago & Northwestern system, announced at a meeting of the city council of Spokane that from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 will be expended on its terminal freight and passenger stations and machine shops in this city. He wants the city to vacate several streets and build the new Monroe Street bridge at another point, adding also that the system of branch lines to be built into the Palouse, Big Bend and Walla Walla districts and the main line extending to western tide water will be greater than those built by the Northern Pacific Railway Company or the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank and others who appeared for the company estimated that $50,000 a year in taxes alone would result from this investment, adding also it would bring 50,000 additional residents to the city. Other bankers present at the meeting were: Aaron Kuhn, president of the Traders' Bank; D. W. Twohy, president of the Old National Bank, and J. A. Hughes of the Farmers & Merchants' Bank. The council will discuss the question of closing the streets at its next meeting.

Planning to Entertain Trade Experts

Frederick E. Goodall, president of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce, who with J. D. Lowman and E. F. Blaine of Seattle, visited New England and eastern, middlewestern and southern states to make arrangements for receptions in honor of trade experts of the chambers of commerce of Japan who will tour the United States in September as guests of the commercial organizations of Seattle, Spokane, Portland and Tacoma, writes to L. G. Monroe, secretary of the local organization that much interest is manifested throughout the country. He says the railroads and banks and commercial clubs will co-operate with the committee and the government will provide trade experts to escort the party across the continent. The Japanese delegation was invited to visit the Northwest and other parts of the United States by the Chambers of Commerce of Seattle, Spokane, Tacoma and Portland. The purpose of the visit is to acquaint these experts with the natural and manufacturing resources of this country and to strengthen trade relations.

F. H. Newell's Opinion on Irrigation

Frederick H. Newell, director of the government reclamation service, who was in Spokane on May 19th the guest of R. Insinger, manager of the Northwestern and Pacific Hypotheekbank and chairman of the board of control of the National Irrigation Congress at a luncheon in the Hall of the Doges, said the time is coming when an immense irrigation project will be carried out for the reclamation of the Big Bend country, west of Spokane. He added that a survey has been made to show it is possible to reclaim 500,000 acres and supply it with moisture by 70 miles of canals using water from the Spokane river. The only reason the reclamation service does not undertake the work now is that it has not the funds to carry on such a large project, "but," he continued, "the work will be done some time." On the basis of two acres for one person the Big Bend project would support a population of 250,000.

Coast Rate would Save $1,000,000

A. W. Doland, chairman of the interstate commerce committee of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce, is mailing invitations to commercial organizations of interior cities to organize for the purpose of resisting the efforts of the transcontinental railroads to upset the recent decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Spokane rate case, which, if upheld, furnishes a precedent for every interior city now paying excessive rates on freight consignments and revolutionize rate-making all over the country. Spokane shippers are now paying on western shipments from Chicago and Missouri river points the rate to the Pacific coast plus the rate back to Spokane. They believe they are entitled to coast rates, at least, while some insist that the charges should be placed upon a service basis, regardless of so-called water competition. The establishment of a coast rate would save the shippers here $1,000,000 a year.

To Vote on Bond Issue

Taxpayers of Franklin county, Wash., south of Spokane, will vote upon the question of bonding the county for $130,000 at a special election on June 19th. The money is to be used to erect a court house. The commissioners have decided to await the result of the vote before buying a site. Warrants drawn some time ago in favor of the Riverside site were returned and the property has reverted to the original owners.

Resigns Secretaryship

Thomas H. Brewer, vice-president of the Exchange National Bank, has resigned as secretary and treasurer of the Western Union Life Insurance Company. He is succeeded by R. Insinger, manager of the Northwestern & Pacific Hypotheekbank.

A new bank building is to be erected for the Union Bank, Rushville, Neb.

Winning Papers in Chicago-Minneapolis Debate

Minneapolis, Minn., May 22, 1909.—Editor THE CHICAGO BANKER.—Enclosed I hand you copies of the papers of the Minneapolis debating team in the debate against Chicago, held in this city May 15th, in which Minneapolis chapter was given a unanimous decision. The question was, "Resolved, that it would be for the best interests of the country to permit national banks to issue credit currency." Yours very truly,

PAUL A. SANDBERG, Secretary.

First Negative: L. E. Wakefield, Northwestern National Bank

Public discussion of the banking and currency problem in the United States admits certain existing faults. We will refer briefly to the most serious of these defects, and in doing so will, I believe, be in full agreement with the gentlemen of the affirmative.

Our currency system is no longer referred to as a model of perfection, but is generally admitted to possess but one good quality: its strength, and this we cannot deny. Our government is directly responsible for it, which makes every dollar of it good as long as the government stands.

Every government in the world, except the United States, keeps a regular bank account just as a private firm, and our present treasury and subtreasury systems are generally admitted to be erroneous. Mr. J. B. Forgan, in a recent address, said: "Our treasury system undertakes to supply commerce with its circulating medium, and having no connection with commercial transactions, other than the collection and disbursement of government revenues, it cannot satisfactorily do so. Even in the collection of these revenues, by hoarding them in its subtreasuries, it unnecessarily and very erroneously interferes with the natural current of the circulating medium. This interference is always the greatest when business is most active and currency most needed."

Another evil in our financial mechanism, that requires attention and a radical change, is our system of so-called bank reserves.

The law requires banks located in New York, Chicago and St. Louis, the three central reserve cities, to keep 25 per cent of their deposits on hand in cash. Banks located in reserve cities, such as Milwaukee, Seattle, Minneapolis and many others, are required to keep 25 per cent reserve, one-half of which must be in cash, and the balance may be on deposit in banks in the central reserve cities. All other national banks are required to carry 15 per cent reserves, of which three-fifths may be on deposit with reserve or central reserve cities. All these classes of banks are credited with their 5 per cent redemption fund as reserve. According to figures compiled by the comptroller of the currency in his 1907 report, this system results in an average cash reserve of 7 and two-fifths per cent of which 6¾ per cent is held in the original bank, and 1 and four-tenths per cent by the reserve agent. So that a reduction in the deposits of the country banks of $150,000 out of deposits of

The Chicago papers were printed in the issue of May 22, and the three herewith by the Minneapolis debaters completes a set of great value to students of the question involved.

$10,000,000, or only 1 and one-half per cent, calls for more cash or reserve money than has been kept on hand in the reserve banks for the whole $10,000,000.

It is directly and immediately due to this that the crisis of October, 1907, assumed the phase of a bank panic and spread all over the country instead of being confined to a comparatively few people and concerns who were first involved.

If the banks had known that their reserves were on deposit where they would be immediately and surely available in currency, there would have been no alarm among them, and no panic among the banks or people.

Honorable Judges, the gentlemen of the affirmative are contending that it would be for the best interests of our people and country to permit all of the national banks to issue credit currency. The great problem of proper redemption of such currency must be considered. When such currency is issued and paid out in the ordinary course of business by the banks, of what effect would be an order from the comptroller of the currency that it be retired? It is easy enough to say you are going to retire so much per month of such currency, but how? How is it to be done?

One of the most important qualities of a good monetary system is that its volume should automatically correspond to the demand for a medium of exchange.

Our present bond secured currency bears no relation to the business of the country. The following from the Wall Street Journal shows the result of our currency system:

"At no time in the recent past has national bank note circulation increased at anything like the present rate. In April, 1907, after the first severe squeeze of the prolonged semi-panic of that year, the national bank notes in circulation totaled $586,823,643. Naturally that circulation increased as the financial crisis became more acute and on January 1st of the following year, the high level of $679,034,664 was reached. This was admitted to be inflation, but against it we could say that we were getting gold from abroad, and also that the gold coin in circulation was expanding and providing a substantial offset. The gold coin in circulation on January 1, 1908, was $648,573,173.

"This was at a time when our absurd currency system was subjected to severe strain and had broken down just as it had broken down fourteen years before. It collapsed then as it is likely to collapse at any crisis, and if circumstances do not produce a crisis, our currency system is quite capable of doing it unassisted.

"The following figures of the increase in national bank note circulation during the present year must cause any serious student considerable misgivings:

|-------------------|----------------|
| May 1, 1909 ..... | $688,326,070  |
| April 1 .....     | 661,591,582... |
| March 1 .....     | 647,598,867    |
| February 1 .....  | 638,910,371    |

"It will be seen that on May 1st we had actually crossed the high figures of January, 1908, and in three months we have inflated the currency by $50,000,000. In 1907 the increase had been offset by an increase in gold coin in circulation. On May 1st, however, the gold coin in circulation was $609,289,337, or more than ten million dollars less than on January 2d of this year; nearly forty million dollars less than in January a year ago, and nineteen million dollars less than in May last year.

"We have in fact been replacing good gold coin with wind. Not only has the gold coin in circulation decreased, but since the beginning of the year we have exported $44,500,000 gold to Europe, and to South America for Europe, and would send more if we had it in convenient form. This, be it understood, is not at a time of financial crisis in Europe, but with the Bank of England's rate at 2 and one-half per cent, money on call in London almost unobtainable, and with the stock exchange's fortnightly loans made at 2 per cent, because the London joint stock banks believe the bank rate will be reduced to that figure before the end of the month.

"And in the face of such money conditions as those abroad, we are actually shipping gold. The increase in the national bank note circulation was inevitable in 1907, and was part of the process of making the best of our indefensible currency system. The increase now is the grossest kind of inflation. It is not justified by any increase in general business. History is full of lessons teaching of the danger of such inflation. It stimulates speculation of the worst kind. The result is to advance the price of all commodities, and of all securities speculatively held, but there necessarily comes a time when that process is sharply arrested. When that event happens, we shall probably receive the most convincing lesson on the necessity for a sound currency system which any nation could desire."

We fully agree with our opponents that there is need of elasticity of our circulation. Yes, we will go further, and admit the desirability of credit currency. Our only difference of opinion seems to be in the method of supplying such credit currency.

Honorable Judges, we contend that to permit the 7,000 national banks of this country to issue such currency would, instead of advancing the best interests of our people, be highly detrimental to our general business fabric. There are, in the United States at the present time, nearly 7,000 national banks, besides twice as many state banks and trust companies. Each of these institutions acts for its individual interest alone, independently of the others, and the prevailing tendency of each, at all times, is to expand its credits to the limit permitted by law. There is no way of regulating the supply of bank credits, and we are to-day suffering with an over abundance of that commodity. A leading banker has said, "Commerce suffers more from the periods of over abundance of money than from those of scarcity. The origin of each recurring period of tight money can be traced to preceding periods of easy money. Whenever money becomes so over abundant that bankers, in order to keep it earning something, have to force it out at abnormally low rates of interest, the foundations are laid for a period of stringency in the not far distant future, for then speculation is encouraged, prices are inflated, and all sorts of securities are floated until the money market is glutted with them."

No reform will, in any way, better conditions, which does not provide for retirement at certain periods of a large amount of our present circulating medium. To add to our present circulation, until the supply shall equal the maximum requirements of commerce in the fall, without providing proper means for its contraction when these requirements are at their minimum in the spring, would only enhance the present evil.

Any correct system of credit currency must be based on a foundation of gold. This is the case with deposits. Under proper banking methods, deposits cannot expand without a proportional increase of the gold reserves of the banks. This furnishes the natural and necessary check to inflation. It would be utterly impossible for any central authority to intelligently fix and regulate the reserves required by each of our 7,000 individual national banks against such credit currency as they might issue. The general situation could in no way be regulated by increasing or diminishing the reserve requirements of all the national banks, for it would be impossible to enforce an order from a central authority directing 7,000 banks to increase the percentage of their reserves by reducing their loans, discounts and deposit liabilities.

Our interest rates are to-day at the lowest level in twelve years, and the volume of money in circulation in the United States is the greatest it has ever been and is steadily increasing.

What we need most of all is some method of retiring a very large amount of our present circulating medium in times like the present, thus avoiding the necessity of permitting its use and tying up in speculative ventures to such an extent that it is not available when needed for legitimate business enterprise.

History proves that in time of panic or stress, banks must lend. Not to lend would be to bring on the disasters that everybody wishes to avert. Now then, under the conditions outlined, to what extent would the issue of the banks' own notes increase their ability to make loans? The minute the notes are issued by the bank, they become an immediate demand liability. Is the ability of the bank to increase its liability a thing which will increase its power to loan? Remember that no bank can put its own notes into its own reserve. That would be like trying to lift yourself across the fence by your own bootstraps.

Mr. Andrew J. Frame, president of the Waukesha National Bank, in an address before the Minnesota bankers convention of 1907, said: "I am free to say that after many years of diligent study over this problem, I am firmly convinced the recommendation of the New York Chamber of Commerce for a bank similar to the Imperial Bank of Germany is far the best. I even note that the currency commission now join in the view. Practically all thorough students of the subject unite in declaring it the ideal plan. The objections generally seem narrow, selfish and superficial."

And so, Honorable Judges, we contend that, in order for the gentlemen of the affirmative to win this argument, it will be necessary for them to prove to you that their plan is for the best interest of the country, without regard for its effect upon the banker. They must show you that their plan will provide elasticity in our circulating medium, and by elasticity we mean a currency that will contract as well as expand. They must provide some relief from the perils of our present government treasury and sub-treasury system, and at the same time correct and strengthen the present system of so-called bank reserves.

In other words, they must prove to your entire satisfaction that to permit the 7,000 national banks of our country (without regard for the 14,000 odd state banks and trust companies) to issue credit currency would best subserve the interests of the eighty-eight million people of our great country.

Second Negative: Gray Warren, First National Bank, Minneapolis

We of the negative side would have it distinctly understood that we agree that the fundamental principles of credit currency are right. We do not disagree with our opponents as to its correctness theoretically. However, we do contend that it would be very unwise to grant the power to issue the same to seven or eight thousand independent banks. We call attention to the fact that no one has as yet suggested or devised a practical way for its redemption under these circumstances. All have evaded this or proposed something that would not work successfully in practice. Besides, we call attention to many serious faults in our present financial system that credit currency alone will not remedy,—the present national bank note, the United States note, the relation of the U. S. Treasury to the money market and, greatest evil of all, our present system of bank reserves. We hold that the adoption of any system, or the granting of any power that would interfere with the adoption or working of a plan that would cure all the defects named, would be unwise, detrimental to all business interests, and entirely opposed to the best interests of the country. Granting even that the power given to national banks to issue credit currency would perhaps cure one of the evils of our currency system (which we doubt) if it in any way interfered with the establishment of a central bank which, by a preponderance of the best authority would cure all the evils we have called attention to, it would manifestly be unwise, and not for the best interests of the country. Without the exclusive power to issue credit currency, and the control of the same, no central bank of the United States would be practical or possible. As to the wisdom of a central bank over other methods of reform proposed, we would call attention to the following statement of those considered the best authority. Senator Aldrich, himself the author of a plan for currency reform, in introducing his bill before the senate, simply admitted that his measure was a compromise, and that a central bank was the logical solution.

Representative Fowler, in submitting his bill to congress, and referring to the Second United State Bank, says: "For evade it as we may, the time will come when the underlying principles of that institution will be incorporated into the laws of the land and every bank will be compelled to redeem its obligations in gold coin. Then our banks will take their place among the financial institutions of the world."

We would quote from the apology made by Mr. A. B. Hepburn for the plan proposed by the currency commission of the American Bankers Association. Chairman Hepburn of this commission said: "Judged from a historical and scientific standpoint, the currency system of this country can best be administered through the instrumentality of a central bank. England proved this and created a Central Bank of Issue, and provided that the note issuing privilege then possessed by existing banks should revert to this central bank whenever for any cause the existing bank should surrender or forfeit the same. United Germany has taught us the same lesson, closely following the example of England, but greatly improving upon the English system in respect to elasticity and ability to serve commercial interests. Yet in this country, the manifest advantages of a central bank of issue are brushed aside on the assumption that public sentiment will not tolerate it."

Lyman G. Gage, in speaking of the central bank, says: "The banking units, whose weakness as they now exist has been so often demonstrated, must receive strength by association together, or with some superior commanding agency, able both to exercise control and furnish effective support. A central bank of adequate capital, properly organized for safety and efficiency, is the sort of an agency to which I refer. Great Britain, France, and Germany offer good models which we may profitably study."

As opposed to credit currency to be issued by all the national banks to remedy our financial system, we would propose a better plan, viz.:

A central bank located in New York City.

Its capital to be to start with from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000.

The stock to be owned by the national banks of the country and to be non-negotiable and non-assignable.

No national bank shall be permitted to own stock in excess of one-tenth of its own capital stock.

The stock owned by any failed or liquidated bank shall be resold to the United States at par, and held in the U. S. treasury until sold to a new bank.

In order to make our reserves available, we would abolish all central reserve cities and require all national banks in reserve cities to carry one-half their reserves in the central bank. We would also require all other national banks to carry one-half of the reserve they are now permitted to carry in reserve cities in the central bank.

The reserve of the central bank shall be gold coin.

The bank shall be governed by a board of twenty-one directors, fourteen of whom shall be elected by the shareholders, and seven appointed by the president of the United States (one of whom shall be the secretary of the treasury) subject to the approval of congress, providing, however, that no two directors shall be residents of any one state.

We would retire all national bank notes by providing that no future issue of U. S. bonds be available as security for national bank circulation.

We would retire all United States notes.

Also we would provide for the retirement of all silver certificates, as rapidly as the supply of silver bullion can be disposed of at a favorable price.

We would limit the issue of untaxed circulation to the amount normally required to conduct the business of the country, provided, however, that this issue shall at no time exceed the amount retired under the preceding provision. Any issue in excess of this amount shall be taxed at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. We would suggest as a proper model for the issue feature of the bank the Imperial Bank of Germany.

The central bank may be permitted to deal in government, state and municipal bonds.

It should also have authority to deal in foreign exchange, such as would enable it to accumulate gold credits abroad, and import gold when needed for its reserve.

It shall act as fiscal agent for the U. S. government.

It will not pay interest on any deposit, nor be permitted to deal in stocks nor deal in stock collateral.

We have only outlined a central bank in a general way, and would assume that its charter would contain proper provisions for the best conduct of its business, both for its own interest and that of the people.

If we had the means to energetically contract our currency, and to use our gold in a scientific and practical way, we would have gold and currency enough to meet any panic. Our outstanding circulation now remains stationary in times of activity, and expands in times of stagnation in business. As a consequence our interest rates vary from 1 to 125 per cent. We can neither protect ourselves by a discount rate, there being no discount system, no central bank, nor can we meet an internal panic, because under our present system each bank is forced to look out for itself, and to try to draw away the cash from the others and increase its own supply, thus aggravating the panic. Our worst hoarders, the banks and trust companies, would, with a central bank in operation, have no reason to look up actual money, since they would be fully protected by accumulating a balance with the central bank. The preposterous system, under which banks, during a scarcity of currency, instead of disbursing their cash, begin to accumulate and actually to hoard money, would be an impossibility. One of the main duties and privileges of European central banks is to buy legitimate commercial paper with bankers' acceptances or endorsements. As the bank buys this paper, the circulation of the notes which they issue increases, and, on the other hand as they collect this paper upon maturity and reduce their discounts, their outstanding circulation decreases. This means that the currency expands and contracts according to the demands of business, and this is not all, for, as those entrusted with the management of the central bank, see the necessity for exercising a restraining influence, they raise the rate at which the bank discounts. This great factor of the European banking machinery is entirely missing with us. Its existence is most important. The role which this paper generally plays in Europe is dependent upon the existence of central banks. The two cannot be separated.

The chief weakness of our present banking system is the provision in regard to reserve deposits, which piles reserve on reserve in central reserve cities until, as we have seen in the crisis of 1907, when a real emergency arises, these reserves are not reserves at all, because they may in a day become unavailable. The increase in cash reserve of country banks from 6 to 10 or 15 per cent would not assist the bank much when it had a large demand for return of its deposits. What such a bank needs is a safe reserve in cash, and a further reserve with a bank where it is surely available at any time in currency. This would be the case with reserve deposits in a central bank.

Another strong argument in favor of the central bank is that it would provide a suitable fiscal agent for the government, and also for the settlement of all international balances without disturbance in foreign exchange. For example, take the payment of the $1,000,000,000 war indemnity by France to Germany with little or no disturbance contrasted with our payment of only $20,000,000 to Spain for the Philippines, or $50,000,000 to France for the Panama Canal. Both of the latter created violent fluctuations, and upset the foreign exchange market. All other plans leave the relation of the U. S. treasury to the money market just as they have been. This is one of the worst features of our present state of affairs.

We have shown you that our present reserve system is practically useless, and by way of emphasis I will read letters sent out from two of our principal reserve cities by banks located there. From Chicago:—"We were obliged to telegraph you to-day that, under the Chicago Clearing House action, we could not execute your order for currency. We regret that this attitude on the part of a city bank became necessary in consequence of the feeling that prevails. We sincerely hope that the flurry will soon be over, and that we can then resume our former relations. In the meantime we must ask our friends to be patient and try to get along on their own resources, without depleting the reserve of city banks for the sake of strengthening their own."

From St. Louis:—"The St. Louis Clearing House, for the protection of the general situation, voted Saturday, October 26th, to issue clearing house certificates. No more government transfers, or currency shipments will be made until conditions improve."

As regards a central bank we are not, as are the advocates of credit currency to be issued by the national banks, advocating an experiment with our financial system. Our plan is the only one that has been tried and found true. An ideal banking system is that which provides for the legitimate needs of a country at moderate rates, with a maximum use of credit and minimum use of cash, which checks illegitimate or dangerous expansion or speculation, and which avoids or minimizes as far as possible all violent fluctuations. The European system of central banks comes very near accomplishing this ideal, while our system has been palpably inefficient. What we need is a central bank to bring our independent, isolated banking units into harmony with each other, and develop our banking system to the point where it will work all the time for the best interests of the people.

In conclusion I will say that the national banks of this country, not even all the banks of this country, for their immediate welfare, are what should be first considered or what should finally determine the nature and the method of issuing the country's currency. One of the greatest statesmen our country has even known speaking more than fifty years ago, said: "The very man of all others, who has the deepest interest in sound currency, and who suffers most by mischievous legislation in money matters, is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil."

Third Negative: J. G. Maclean, Security National Bank, Minneapolis

We of the negative side admit that conditions in this country are such as to warrant a change in our banking system. The first speaker of the negative side has shown you the faults in the system of permitting all national banks to issue credit currency, while the second speaker has outlined a plan of a central bank which we are proposing to establish, which will remedy the evils existing and which we maintain is far superior to the plan proposed by our worthy opponents. It will be my aim to explain the workings of our plan and to prove to you that it will remedy the evils complained of, by citing instances in foreign countries where a bank similar to ours has been of a great benefit to the people.

One of the strongest arguments in favor of a central bank is that with its establishment we shall have solved the problem of reserve. During the last panic, it was clearly demonstrated that our present reserve system is useless in times of need. This was clearly shown on the 28th day of October, 1907, when word was flashed across the wires of the country that the New York banks had suspended currency shipments, resulting in the same action being taken by banks in other reserve cities, which produced a condition unheard of in any other country,—namely, the suspension of payment by practically all the banks of this great country. Previous to this time, our bankers had been carrying a heavy reserve with their correspondents, and in a day this reserve became unavailable. The banks of New York were the first to suspend currency shipments. When we realize that on the day they took this action the reserves of the clearing house banks had decreased only $12,900,000 as compared to the week previous, we must admit that there is something radically wrong with our present reserve system.

According to the comptroller's report, there was due on August 22d, 1907, from the reserve agents $614,000,000, one-half of which under our plan would have been on deposit in the central bank. Remembering that the central bank would carry a gold reserve and be permitted to issue currency, with a still further provision for an emergency circulation, it can readily be seen that the entire reserve would have been available. On August 22, 1907, there was due to national banks by the national banks of New York a little over $259,000,000, and from the national banks of Chicago there was due $115,000,000, or a total of $374,000,000 due to national banks from the national banks in these two principal reserve cities. Thus, with one-half of the reserve deposited in the central bank, as provided in our plan, which we have shown you would all have been available, we maintain that the last panic could have been avoided; because an amount of reserve greatly in excess of that due from the New York banks, and very nearly as much as that due from both New York and Chicago banks, would have been available.

In order properly to protect the customers of our banks from inconveniences similar to those of the fall of 1907, we must provide a banking system where our reserves will be available. This our opponents cannot do under their system, and, in fact, it can be done only under the system of a central bank. Lest I may be misunderstood, let me say emphatically that we do not claim that the central bank will do away with liquidation or readjustment; for we well know that whenever the limit is reached in credits in proportion to the reserve money on which all credit is based, there will always be liquidation and readjustment. But we do maintain that under the operation of the central bank liquidation and readjustment will be gradual, and not in the form of a panic; for the central bank will act as a sort of safety valve. This is proven by the operation of the central bank in foreign countries, and it is fair to assume that if it works in that manner there, it will also work the same way here. In support of this statement, I wish to read extracts from Conant's Modern Banks of Issue, describing the workings of the Bank of England during the panic of 1866.

"The decision of the court, coming at a season of growing alarm, caused a run upon Overend, Gurney & Co., by depositors, and on the afternoon of May 10th the firm suspended with liabilities of £18,727,915.

"The next day, May 11th, known as 'Black Friday,' was long memorable in English financial history. Lombard Street became impassable with the surging crowd, and extravagant rumors assailed the reputations of the strongest houses. The Bank of England extended accommodations during the day in loans and discounts to an amount exceeding £4,000,000, and the banking reserve was reduced close to £3,000,000. The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced these facts in the evening in the House of Commons and stated that the government had addressed a letter to the bank authorizing the suspension of the Act of 1844. The announcement was received with cheers, and the news had a marked effect in mitigating the panic next day. The effect of the suspension of the Act of 1844 was so marked that it appeared the next day, which was Saturday, as if the crisis was at an end. The pressure upon the banks ceased for the moment, and the Bank of England did not find it necessary to use the authority to issue notes beyond the legal limits."

I also refer you to the remarks made by Mr. Isaac N. Seligman before a meeting of Philadelphia bankers, speaking of the Imperial Bank of Germany, which is a central bank. He says: "At the time of the failure of the Leipziger Bank in Germany, there was a run on one of the largest banks in Germany, this bank turning over some 75,000,000 marks of discounts,—namely, commercial and bankers' endorsed three to six months' bills,—to the Reichsbank, which in turn furnished them funds, and the run ceased at once."

The second and third benefit from the operation of the central bank to which I wish to call your attention is that it will provide an elastic currency, and with this bank in operation it will not be necessary to call in loans as was the case during the last panic. In considering an elastic currency, I wish to call your attention to two fundamental principles as stated by Prof. Joseph French Johnson, one of the foremost political economists of the country and dean of the New York University School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance. He stated:

First, No bank currency can be elastic unless the limit of possible issue exceeds the maximum demand for currency.

Second, No country can have a really elastic bank currency so long as any lawful paper money of the same denomination is in circulation.

The demand for more currency comes every fall from two sources. First, from the business man who handles a crop from the time it is shipped from the country until it is distributed, there is a demand for credit in the shape of loans from the banks. The farmer in most cases refusing to accept anything but cash, there is a demand from the country banks for currency. Under conditions which existed heretofore, this currency was supplied by the banks in reserve cities, who were obliged to call in their loans in order to maintain the legal reserve, which, naturally, was depleted by currency shipments. This would not be the case in the operation of the central bank. With this bank in operation, the country banks would either order the currency from the central bank or else from their reserve correspondent. In the first place it would be a charge against the bank's reserve account, which would have to be made up as I will explain later.

In the second place, it would also be a charge against the account of the bank ordering currency. But, instead of being obliged to call in their loans, they would be able to rediscount some of their commercial paper in the central bank, obtaining the necessary currency. As the marketing of the crops would create exchange, the same would be sent to the central bank to offset currency ordered, and this the central bank would have as a claim against the bank on which the exchange was drawn. In all probability, this exchange could be charged to the reserve account of the bank on which it was drawn, with the central bank reserve, which account would be maintained discounts. After the currency had done its work, it would begin to flow back to either the reserve cities or the central bank. As the discounts became due, the central bank would insist on their being paid in currency or else it would collect currency on the exchange sent in by banks with which to build up the reserve. Thus, in this manner we would be provided with an elastic currency absolutely under the control of the central bank; and as the demand for currency came for the moving of the crops, it would not be necessary for banks to call in their loans, as is now the case.

But, to go still further, let me remind you that the volume of currency now existing is of a fixed quality. No system so far proposed has provided for the contraction of the now existing currency. History proves that at times we have had a surplus amount of currency, as was the case following the panic of 1893, when, owing to the surplus, banks were obliged to reduce the interest rate on balances. At the present time, according to Henry Clews, we are on the verge of exporting gold in accordance with the workings of the never failing Gresham law.

In order to make the present per capita circulation elastic, so that it can be contracted or expanded, we would gradually retire our silver certificates, treasury notes, legal tenders and national bank notes, replacing them with the notes of the central bank, the expansion and contraction of which will take place as we have shown you.

The last benefit resulting from the operation of a central reserve bank to which your attention is called is that its establishment will control the interest rates. We read in the comptroller's report for 1907 the following:

"The high point for stock exchange loans in November was 27 per cent; in December, 36 per cent; January, 45 per cent; March, 25 per cent;

June, 12 per cent; July, 16 per cent; September, 10 per cent, and October, 125 per cent."

We are the only country in the world where rates of interest run as high as this, and this would not be the case had we in existence a central reserve bank of issue. We find on referring to the New York bank statements in the comptroller's report that on February 4, 1906, the national banks of New York held $199,000,000 of specie and legal tender, and on May 20th after all the crops had been removed, their holdings amounted to $230,000,000, or an increase of $31,000,000. Thus, for the time being, or until the next fall, when there is another call for money for crop moving purposes, they have an extra reserve which created approximately $124,000,000 of loaning power. This sudden increase of loaning power every year has had the effect of lowering interest rates and, naturally, encouraging speculation. In the fall of the year, when this money is again needed, there must be called in, in order to maintain their legal reserve, an amount of loans equal to four times the amount of the currency shipped. This results in the increasing of the interest rates. With a central bank in operation, all surplus funds would be deposited with them and speculation would be curtailed, if not eliminated, because there would be withdrawn from New York banks one-half of the reserve now on deposit there, or $129,000,000, which amount could be withdrawn in reserve money if desired. This amount we estimate would cover all the surplus, and there would be none left for speculation purposes; and, with the central bank rediscounting only for commercial purposes, we hold that speculation and interest rates would absolutely be under the control of the central bank.

The Chicago-Minneapolis Debate

By R. R. SLEEPER.

At Minneapolis Saturday evening, May 15th, Chicago debated Minneapolis. The question was the advisability of allowing the national banks of this country to issue credit currency. The Chicago speakers were H. W. Dorn, Commercial National; B. B. Bellows, Chicago Savings Bank & Trust Co., and R. R. Sleeper, Continental National, who defended the affirmative, while Gray Warren, First National, L. E. Wakefield, North-western National, and John A. Maclean, Security National, of Minneapolis, defended the negative. Both the Minneapolis and the Chicago speakers agreed as to the necessity of a change in our present system of issuing note currency, so as to establish a bearer currency which will expand and contract to meet the ever changing needs of commerce, but they disagreed as to who should be the agencies for the issue of this currency.

The decision was in favor of the negative. The Minneapolis speakers presented a very logical argument in favor of a central bank as opposed to our national banks for the issuance of bank notes. They suggested a national association, something like our clearing house associations.

The Minneapolis chapter men deserve great credit for the painstaking care and the open hospitality they showed the Chicago team. The morning was taken up in visiting the banks in Minneapolis. There are a number of attractive banking offices in Minneapolis which are well ventilated and filled with sunlight even on dark days. The afternoon was spent in visiting the St. Paul banks, and the return trip was made by way of Ft. Snelling and Minnehaha Falls. The Chicago men took dinner Saturday at the Commercial Club with a number of the members of Minneapolis chapter. Sunday morning an automobile trip was taken all over the city, visiting the fine residence districts, the parks and the driveways around Lake Harriet, Lake Calhoun and the Lake-of-the-Isles.

The afternoon was spent visiting Lake Minnetonka, traveling around a large part of the beautiful lake aboard a steamer and finally returning by trolley to the city. Just before leaving Minneapolis a visit was made to St. Anthony Falls, which furnishes the power for many of the city's famous flour mills.

The Minneapolis and St. Paul chapters have invited the delegates en route to the Seattle convention to stop over a day at the Twin Cities. An exceptionally fine trip has been planned for the day. The important places in both cities will be visited in cars and boats especially chartered for the occasion.

No delegate ought to fail to accept this invitation for the hospitality of both Minneapolis and St. Paul chapters is widely known. It exceeds even the best reports which have come to Chicago as the Chicago team who were there recently will agree.

Banking Conditions in California

et has a restraining effect upon crooks. If this were all the benefit to be derived, their absence from our membership might seem excusable. This, however, is only an incidental benefit, when compared with advantages that the association can offer. Let us hope for better results before we meet in convention again.

Los Angeles has already extended an invitation to the American Bankers Association to hold its annual meeting for 1910 in that city. The effort to bring them here will be continued at the meeting held in Chicago in September, this year. By concerted action on our part, the movement ought to be successful. We may well have a justifiable pride in California, and a laudable ambition to bring our friends out to view this land of our adoption, and it is a matter of much satisfaction to see how universal is the desire to help along the movement. Not alone Los Angeles is interested in the successful outcome of the effort, but every part of the state is interested as well. May our united labor be crowned with success.

The growth of our association during the past two or three years makes it very apparent that the time is ripe for an advance movement in our usefulness. I refer to the division of the state into groups, much after the manner of what has already been done by our clearing house committee. Six groups would seem to cover the state very effectively, as follows:

San Francisco group for the Bay territory; Los Angeles, comprising all banks south of Tehachapi, including Santa Barbara and Ventura Counties; Fresno, covering the Upper San Joaquin Valley; Sacramento, the Sacramento Valley and the Lower San Joaquin Valley; San Jose, the Coast territory between San Luis Obispo and San Francisco; Santa Rose, the coast territory north of San Francisco.

In each of the districts covered there is a community of interests, and meetings can be held and questions discussed that are of mutual benefit, and which can not properly come before our annual convention covering the whole state. The group meeting would in no sense do away with our annual convention, but would be held at times most convenient to its members, and generally would cover a single day.

I hope some move may be made by us in this convention, looking to a modification of our constitution and by-laws, and a preparation for the next and logical step in our development. Almost every eastern state has tried the plan, and has found it advantageous. If it works well when cities are close together it ought to be of more advantage to us in a state of such magnificent distances as California.

Trust Company a Necessity

James C. Cunningham, secretary-treasurer of the Union Trust company of Spokane, said in the course of an address before a class in the Young Men's Christian Association's room at Spokane that the trust company is a necessity in every community; consequently, the nature of its business is determined largely by conditions surrounding it, and its success depends upon the manner in which it meets the requirements of its constituency, whether these be agriculture, mining, lumbering, construction or manufacturing, or all of them combined, as is the case in Spokane.

"Probably the most important function of a trust company," he said, "is that of a trustee or administrator. It is preferable to an individual trustee or administrator, because it possesses every essential quality which the individual lacks, as follows:

"It is permanent; it does not die.

"It does not go abroad.

"It does not become insane.

"It does not imperil the trust by failure or dishonesty.

"Its experience and judgment in trust matters are beyond dispute.

"It never neglects its work or hands it over to untrustworthy people.

"It does not refuse to act from caprice, or on the ground of inexperience.

"It is invariably on hand during business hours and can be consulted at all times.

"Its wide experience of trust business and trust securities is invaluable to the estate.

"It is absolutely confidential.

"It has no sympathies or antipathies and no politics.

"It can be relied upon to act up to its instructions, a religious observance of which and also the legal safeguards, has made the enviable record of the trust company in the United States possible, which stands out in striking contrast to the court records and other evidences which we have of the dissipation and losses which have resulted from individual administration as executor and trustee, leaving in its wake much untold want and misery.

"The statutes of many states regarding trust companies are very liberal, while a few of the states impose very onerous restrictions upon their operation. Our own commonwealth, Washington, had no special statute governing trust companies until 1903, when the legislature passed a statute similar in many respects to the trust company act of the state of New York, which is considered one of the most liberal and progressive acts yet enacted. The trust company supplements the national bank. Every developing country requires different classes of financial institutions, and a brief review of the history of the trust company in the United States proves conclusively that there has been an urgent and persistent demand for the trust company.

"There were only a few small trust companies in existence in this country 25 years ago, while there are to-day upward of 2,500 trust companies in the United States, with aggregate resources of more than $4,500,000,000.

"Now what as to the stability of trust companies? Does their history vindicate the wisdom of the statutory provisions and legal safeguards under which they exist in the several states?

"In New York, where trust companies are most numerous and where they were first organized, they have prospered and flourished beyond the fondest hopes of their founders, until to-day their aggregate resources have reached the enormous sum of more than $1,250,000,000. Yet, during all this history of more than a third of a century, the official reports of New York show that every deposit and every liability to a trust or estate has been met dollar for dollar.

"There have been but two trust companies in the United States through which there has been lost a dollar of trust funds, these being the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company of San Francisco, and the New England Trust Company of Providence, R. I., which were looted by dishonest officials who are now in prison, or out on bail awaiting trial.

"This is the history of the trust company. They are doubtless susceptible to improvement, but useful, stable, conservative, responsive to the business and a need of all sections of our great country."

Fred W. Ellsworth in California

The publicity expert for the First National of Chicago delivers a practical paper on Bank Advertising at the Del Monte Convention.

In discussing the broad subject of bank advertising it is first necessary to give careful and discriminating consideration to those fundamentals which are essential to the continued and permanent success of any financial institution and without which no advertising campaign, no matter how wisely conceived or ably executed, can achieve satisfactory results.

First of these and undoubtedly the most important is the personality of the management. The officers and directors of a bank which wants to grow must be men who command universal respect and in whom the community has the utmost confidence. To deserve this consideration they must possess certain characteristics. An eastern banker in a recent address enumerated these about as follows, and in this order: honesty, ability, conservatism with liberality along good business lines, absence of restriction or narrowness in small matters, courtesy. The bank whose management is unable to display these qualities not only must not expect new business, but actually does not deserve it, and all the intelligent advertising in Christendom cannot bring it.

The second of these fundamentals is an ample surplus. This serves as a significant permanent announcement to the public that the bank is more interested in its strength and the consequent protection of its depositors than in immediate cash lividends.

Good service may be mentioned as the third of the fundamentals. And good service, by the way, is the original and perpetual business getter. A trite saying it is, but nevertheless true, that a satisfied customer is the best advertisement. A bank whose officers and clerks are courteous and obliging and who cheerfully render to their customers intelligent and painstaking service will seldom lose trade, and every customer will be a volunteer drummer.

A loyal office force is quite necessary to the maintenance of a high order of service, and loyalty can be secured only by the unbiased application of the "square deal."

Contributory elements which assist and strengthen the fundamentals are an attractive office, and dignified and well appointed stationery.

In order to get these fundamentals clearly in our minds let us go over them again briefly.

1. Personality—signifying ability.
2. Surplus—denoting strength.
3. Service.

There you have them—ability, strength, service. With these three foundation stones as a basis it should not be difficult for any bank to acquire new business, other things being equal. And doesn't it seem entirely logical, if a bank possesses these essential characteristics that the public should be made acquainted with them? If it is logical, then it is wise to advertise, providing, of course, that the advertising is done systematically and continuously.

This leads us to a consideration of the specific subject of bank advertising.

To begin with, all bank advertising should be dignified. This goes without saying. A bank cannot adopt advertising methods some of which might with entire propriety be employed by a chewing gum manufacturer or a dry goods store. For instance, a department store can offer in the evening paper a sale of socks for the morrow fifty cents value reduced to thirty-nine. Such an ad is, of course, perfectly proper for a department store. A bank, however, which attempted to advertise a sale of choice certificates of deposit or high class bonds at reduced rates would be immediately stamped as a business imbecile.

Just what this dignity consists of is naturally left to the individual understanding, and in this there has been remarkable evolution during the past few years.

It was not so long ago that banks considered it undignified to solicit business in any way. Today the bank which has the same conception of the word and refuses to exert itself to secure customers is either standing still or losing ground, with the chances larger in favor of the latter condition.

Bank advertising naturally divides itself into two classes, viz.: general and specific.

Under the former may be grouped the use of daily newspapers, financial and commercial journals, magazines, novelties, etc. The latter class may include personal letters, booklets, circulars, and personal contact.

Newspapers. From the fact that the local newspaper is read more generally and more thoroughly perhaps than any other form of publication, that medium is commonly accepted as the logical repository for a liberal percentage of the advertising appropriation. In communities where there are more than one, great care should be exercised in determining which to use. As a general rule it is wise, for very obvious reasons, to patronize all.

In considering newspaper ads there are three essentials to bear in mind: (1) composition, (2) dress, (3) position.

To begin with, too much thought cannot be given to the message which is to be delivered to a discriminating audience. By all means avoid the stilted old fashioned card, announcing the name of the bank, its capital, officers, and directors. This form of publicity says nothing of special interest to the average newspaper reader and is so painfully erect with its forced dignity that it is apt to repel rather than attract. An ad should say something. That's what it's for. Nobody is going to read, nor digest, nor act on a message that stops with the announcement of the title. A national bank can call attention to its reserve feature, and its consequent safety; can invite the reserve as well as the active accounts of out-of-town banks; and can explain its collection facilities. Savings banks can conduct a

Des Moines, June 2.—The Des Moines Bankers Club at its May meeting last week held a decidedly interesting discussion of a question that had never before been raised at one of the club meetings, the question of whether or not national banks should have savings departments. The question arose in connection with the ever present debate on guaranteed bank deposits and postal savings banks which had consumed the greater part of the evening. In view of the recent establishment in Des Moines of savings bank departments in addition to the Iowa National and Des Moines National, the discussion at once assumed a most interesting aspect.

Some of the bankers contended that national banks are purely commercial institutions to make short time loans. The functions of the savings bank were given as loans for long periods upon real estate and farm lands. With these functions entirely different, it was contended that the two sorts of banks should remain distinct. One or two of the speakers spoke in favor of keeping national and state banks separate from savings banks. Of course the other side of the question was argued and in the end, the meeting adjourned with the bankers voting it one of the most instructive sessions in months. As to guaranteed bank deposits, the bankers were opposed to it and the majority seemed to favor modified postal savings banks in case either is likely to come, as Judge Walter I. Smith declared at the group meeting at Council Bluffs a fortnight ago.

Bank Changes Name

The directors of the Marquardt Savings, one of the best known banks in Des Moines, have voted to change the name of the institution to the Commercial Savings and it will be known by this latter name after July 1st. The change was made to dispel the idea that the bank is a private bank. The business will be continued at the old quarters in the Marquardt block at Fifth and Locust streets and the officers were re-elected as follows: President, G. D. Ellyson; vice-president, D. F. Witter; cashier, John H. Hogan. The Marquardt Savings was organized in 1891. G. W. Marquardt and some of his friends were the organizers and the early business was purely savings. In 1895, the present management assumed control and began a business of general banking. The institution has always been popular and gets its share of the financial business of the city.

Old Bank Building Sold

One of the oldest buildings in the city, that occupied years ago by the old Des Moines Savings bank located at Third and Walnut streets has been sold for $25,000. Simon Casaday, president of the Central State is the main purchaser while associated with him are Philip M. Casaday, Thomas Casaday, Jr., R. C. McDougal, Ward Henry and P. N. Henry. The bank had been forced to desert the building long ago and later removed to Fourth and Walnut where it remained until it consolidated with the Iowa National and removed to the Fleming block two years ago. The plans of the purchasers have not been made public.

Parole Causes Talk

Excitement over the parole of Cashier Leroy Ware of the defunct Farmers & Drovers at Seymour continues to be rife in southern Iowa. Letters were written to Governor Carroll which caused him to issue a statement explaining that he took no share in the transaction but that the parole was issued purely upon the responsibility of the state board of parole. Governor Carroll explained that both former governor A. B. Cummins and himself had declined to either parole or pardon Ware but that the case went up to the state board of parole without the recommendation of either executive.

Trying to Recover Money

An interesting case is on trial at Sioux City, that of A. N. Bort of Beloit, Wis., as head banker of the Modern Woodmen of America against E. H. McCutchen and Company of Holstein. McCutchen was owner of a bank at Holstein in which Bort had deposited $100,000 of the order's funds. When McCutchen died affairs were seen to be in bad shape and Bort is trying to collect the money belonging to the lodge which he had thus deposited.

Comparison of Deposits

An interesting comparison of deposits in the various banks of Des Moines is shown in the monthly report made by the clearing house association. The Iowa National ranks first with deposits of $6,527,250.73. Then follow in their order, Des Moines National, $4,812,094.16; Valley National, $2,348,880.27; Central State $2,321,107.59; Citizens National, $2,158,871.03; People's Savings $2,124,917.79; Capital City State, $1,437,971.57; Home Savings, $922,775.60; German Savings, $735,249.58; Marquardt Savings, $685,862.73; Mechanics Savings, $584,437.93; Century Savings $468,144.87; Iowa Trust and Savings $450,181.97; Iowa State $418,720.62. Since the last preceding report was issued, the Central State has moved from sixth to fourth place. There is an interesting and substantial growth all along the line which indicates much for the prosperity of the various institutions.

Believe Interest Rates are Growing Firmer

Among Des Moines bankers there is an impression that interest rates are growing firmer. The period of phenomenally easy money in the east is believed to be past and the surplus money of the banks has disappeared. Des Moines bankers point out that on account of the great volume of trading in stocks apparent, one of two things is likely to happen. Either the market will break or interest rates will go higher and Des Moines financiers incline towards the latter view. Then again in the price of grain is high and if this continues for the harvest this year, an unprecedentedly large amount of money will be needed to finance the harvest and the surplus will be more than wiped away.

Changes in Banking Circles

Several changes have taken place in Iowa banking circles. Joseph F. Miller has been made vice-president of the Farmers National at Hamburg succeeding G. M. Beal and H. H. Clayton has been made vice-president in place of J. E. Morgan. F. S. Miller is now assistant cashier in place of B. G. Franklin. In the First National at Burt, S. E. McMahon has succeeded J. W. Wadsworth as president and H. O. Buel is cashier in place of C. B. Smith. Birchard Brush has been made assistant cashier in the Osage National. In the Fayette County National at West Union, G. D. Darnall has been made president to take the place of S. B. Ziegler, de-

IDAHO-OREGON LIGHT &amp; POWER CO.

FIRST AND REFUNDING 6% GOLD BONDS

MATURING SERIALLY, 1925 TO 1940

Principal and Semi-Annual Interest (April 1st and October 1st) Payable at the State Bank of Chicago. Denomination, $1,000

¶ The Idaho-Oregon Light & Power Company furnishes electric light and power to the cities of Boise, Emmett and Payette, Idaho. From these operations the net earnings for the year 1908 were $123,500. Present operations in these three cities, and earnings from new lighting and power contracts in territory now served by the Company's lines will produce net earnings for the year 1909 amounting to $180,000.

¶ At Ox Bow Bend, in the Snake River—55 miles north of Huntington, Oregon—the Company is developing, with the money derived from the sale of the bonds now offered, a remarkable water power which will produce 21,000 salable horse-power, measured in Boise.

¶ Construction will be completed about April, 1910, and the entire plant will then be ready to operate. New business then available will double the gross earnings without much increase in operating expenses. Net earnings from present operations are sufficient to cover all fixed charges, including interest on the bonds issued for the Ox Bow Construction.

¶ The rapid growth of the surrounding territory, through the development of orchards and intensive farming in the Boise and Payette Valleys, insures an increasing market for this power.

¶ This bond issue constitutes a first mortgage lien on the hydro-electric development of 21,000 horse-power, valuable riparian rights, exclusive water rights, all property now owned or hereafter to be acquired by the Company, 120 miles of transmission lines in Idaho and Oregon, with sub-stations, franchises and distribution systems in the cities of Boise, Payette and Emmett, Idaho.

Attempts to Secure Pardon Fail

Attempts to secure a pardon for Carl M. Spencer, the convicted receiving clerk for the Des Moines National have apparently availed little. The mandate from the circuit court of appeals commanding that Spencer be taken to the penitentiary within thirty days thereafter was received by the federal court officers some days ago.

Scarcity of Paper Money in West Noticed

Des Moines bankers are noticing an unusual large number of silver half dollars and they are inclined to believe that the government is distributing them to the big banks at a bargain rate. In other words prepaid express rates have been offered in order to get rid of the coin at the money centers. People who come to Iowa from the east always notice the scarcity of paper money and the dirty condition of most of it to be found in the west.

Iowa Ahead of Georgia Banking Department

Head Bank Examiner Frank Roberts, in the Iowa banking department, has returned from Georgia where he visited the Georgia department and pronounced it not up to Iowa. He has sent the Georgia department a bundle of the sample checks used in Iowa and is figuring that Georgia will adopt the Iowa idea in its banking headquarters.

Creditors Paid in Full

Creditors were repaid dollar for dollar by receiver H. J. Schroeder, in charge of the defunct bank at West Point. The bank failed February 1, 1908. Its liabilities were $124,791. The president of the institution is Riley Smith of Hancock county, Illinois, who gave up all but 80 acres of a 730 acre farm in order to liquidate the indebtedness.

Evidence Strong against Geo. Lytel

The evidence against George Lytel, alleged to be one of the men who robbed the Badger bank on April 20th, was considered sufficiently strong to warrant holding him to the grand jury in the opinion of a justice of the peace at Fort Dodge. Lytel had a "jiminy" in his pocket when arrested in Sioux City.

Banker Loses his Mother

Mrs. Mary Stuckslager is dead at Lisbon aged 79. She was the mother of State Senator W. C. Stuckslager, who is a banker at Lisbon and well known in Iowa political and financial circles.

Look Out!

Bankers are on the lookout for John Harris who it is said has been fleecing a number of bankers in the vicinity of Eldora. Bankers at Weldon, Leroy and Garden Grove report visits from him. He posed as a horse buyer and used forged telegrams extensively in his business.

Des Moines Visitors

Iowa bankers who visited in Des Moines recently are president N. H. Alexander, of the Citizens, Griswold; cashier Martin Mee, of the First National, Gladbrook; cashier Homer S. Thomas, First National, Conrad.

Meeting of Group Eight

The meeting of Group Eight at Clinton, Thursday, May 27th, was one of the most successful of the many that have thus far been held in the state. About 120 bankers were on hand. The programs were decidedly novel in that they were made up of blank pages so that no banker knew exactly what was coming next. Congressman Allen Dawson, of the Second Iowa district, gave an address on the currency problem, pointing out the differences that exists as to proper solutions and ending by declaring that in the end either asset currency or a central bank of issue will be the result of present agitation. Judge Barker of Davenport was in charge of the question box and he gave able answers to the many legal questions fired at him by the bankers present. The "Guaranty of Bank Deposits" was the subject of an interesting paper read by banker Wells.

At noon, the bankers sat down to lunch in the Wapsipinicon club house where the sessions were held. A meritorious vaudeville show kept things moving during the banquet hour. The program was resumed in the afternoon and the business of the group was transacted.

The bankers adopted resolutions favoring J. D. Easton of Waterloo for president of the Iowa Bankers Association. I. M. Sproull of Washington was endorsed for secretary. A. L. Bartholomew of the First National at Preston was chosen chairman for next year. J. W. Reiman of the People's Savings at Grand Mound was chosen secretary. The group decided to meet next year at Muscatine.

There is but one group meeting yet to be held, the Third, which will probably meet at Osage early in June.

Review Difficulties of Present Financial System

In his address before the Kansas State Bankers Association, President Arthur Reynolds of the Des Moines National discussed "Some Aids in the Solution of the Currency Problem" in his usual able manner. He paid his respects to the postal savings bank and the guaranty of bank deposits and gave an interesting review of the difficulties with the present financial system suggesting means by which it may be improved. Mr. Reynolds is sanguine in the belief that the currency system will improve and declared that United States notes should be retired, that each bank should maintain proper reserves in its own vault and pleaded for educational work towards overcoming the apprehension that exists against bank notes.

campaign of educational advertising which will prove of mutual benefit to the bank and its customers. This may be done by a series of newspaper ads supplemented by a well thought out and carefully prepared booklet, which can describe in detail the various functions of a savings bank and the divers manners in which it can serve the public—items which have been referred to in a general way in the ad. Should the bank desire to determine which of the papers is producing the most business, each ad may be keyed by inviting the public to write or call for Booklet "A" or Booklet "B", the initial letter being different in each paper. In this connection a card record of all inquiries should be kept and this may be referred to as accounts are opened. By this means the relative value of various mediums can be determined pretty accurately. Trust companies, which in recent years have entered the advertising field extensively, have in their varied function very attractive material for use in publicity matter.

After it has been decided what is to be said in the ad it is very important that serious consideration be given to display. A knowledge of type faces is of inestimable value at such a time, for it enables one to select the best and most appropriate styles. Many a good ad has been rendered of no avail by the use of poor type display. Most papers will set up an ad and submit proof so that the exact appearance may be seen before it appears in print; and when proof is finally O. K'd matrices may be made for other papers (where stereotyped plates are used) so that it will appear in each of the papers just as it is wanted. Where it is possible there should be ample white space on all sides of the ad, principally to separate it from other matter, and secondarily to improve its general appearance.

The dress taken care of, the third important consideration is position. Some newspapers, especially those in larger towns, maintain a special page where all bank advertising appears, unless ordered on another page, when extra charge is made; but in a majority of papers good position at the top of the column and next to reading matter may be secured if insisted on, at little or no additional cost. After the order is given it is well to watch the ad from day to day in order to be assured of continued good position, for in the rush of making up a paper the advertiser who never makes a kick, and who will soon become known in the make-up room as "easy" is liable to be gradually forced into an out-of-the-way place. An accurate record of all orders should be kept, giving name of the paper, date of insertions and size of ad. This should be supplemented by a file or a clipping of each ad which, after dating and labeling is filed in a dossier or scrap book where it may be readily available.

Before placing ads in periodicals of any kind and especially in those with which you are unfamiliar it is wise to determine whether or not their circulation manager is an exaggerator, for there is no surer, quicker way to throw money to the four winds than by advertising with a paper whose circulation is calculated with an air pump.

The legitimate financial and commercial periodicals have a distinct mission in the business world, in spite of the black sheep that march in this class, and which have no valid excuse for existence except to give employment to indigent solicitors who spend their time bothering busy men.

The value of the modern magazine as an advertising medium for banks is problematical, unless it be for the banking-by-mail feature, in which event it no doubt may be used with results.

The advertising value of the novelty depends altogether on its lasting qualities; and even where the novelty may have a life of months or years it is a question as to whether the same sum expended in printers' ink will not produce more business. If a novelty of value is distributed by a bank in order to secure new business, it would be no more than right to favor the old customers as well; and with an institution of any size the cost of such an investment would be almost prohibitive.

Many banks to-day are using to good advantage the personal form letters with numerous follow-ups and these are mailed periodically to selected lists of prospective customers. It is obvious that the value of such lists lies first in the care with which they are composed, and second in their frequency of revision. In connection with such a plan it is quite necessary to maintain a card record of each name so that the necessary entries may be made thereon indicating the various data in connection with the advertising campaign.

The advertising booklet is a comparatively recent product but is now used by hundreds of progressive banks. Care should be exercised in distributing booklets to insure their reaching the most susceptible prospects. A savings bank can use this form of publicity with good results and has been demonstrated in innumerable instances. A great deal, of course, depends on the composition and appearance of the booklet. A fault which is more or less common and which can be easily obviated is that of attempting to cover too much ground. One or two points well handled in an interesting manner and thoroughly driven home will inevitably produce better results than an attempt to partially cover a half a dozen.

As was stated in the beginning of this talk personality after all is the vital force in the success of almost any enterprise. It is the foundation stone of business building. A bank to successfully and continually increase in size and prestige must be able to attract business through the personality of its management, the personality of its employees and by the personality of its solicitors if it chooses to employ such. The bank which can present to the business community a strong and significant group of facilities need have no fear as to its continued growth.

The structure will be thirty-five by fifty feet, one story high and have a flat roof, topped by central dome covered with copper. It will be constructed of red brick, with limestone trimmings. The interior will be divided into a lobby for the public, a ladies' room and the cashier's room on the left. On the right and in the rear are the coupon room, the vault and the directors' room.

The trimming and counters will be of hardwood, and light will come from a skylight, as well as all four sides of the building. The cost will be about $20,000.

Waterloo Convention

Waterloo, Iowa, June 10.—The twenty-third annual meeting of the Iowa Bankers Association convened here this morning in Syndicate Theatre. The attendance is the largest in the history of this famous organization, which is the largest in the country. Secretary

J. H. INGWERSEN
Clinton, Iowa

Dinwiddie reports more than 1,300 members, and John T. Brooks, the president, reviewed the banking conditions of the year within the state, in a masterly manner. The usual addresses of welcome with appropriate responses were heard, and much of the morning session was given up to committee and official reports. Quite a number of new applications for membership were filed at the registration counter. At the afternoon session to-day Governor B. F. Carroll, who formerly was state auditor and thus "bank commissioner" of the state, drew a crowded house. His address which is printed in full elsewhere in this edition, is so full of the wisdom born of his years of experience as chief banking officer of the state, that every banker wanted to hear it, and those who did not hear it will want to read it. Mr. Pollard, of Fort Madison, was on the program for this session, and contributed his drawing power to the large assemblage. After the fixed addresses there was a period of general discussion. Secretary Dinwiddie had requested everybody to "talk up and don't be bashful," to which request, the delegates gave adequate response.

For to-morrow's session which will begin at 3:30 o'clock, two eloquent speakers are scheduled, E. St. Elmo Lewis of Detroit, and the Hon. J. Adam Bede of Minnesota, who will speak of "Modern Money Making." Both of these gentlemen will speak extemporaneously, and will draw a large attendance at the morning session. When they have finished, the balance of the time will be taken up with the election of officers, and with unfinished items of business.

The attendance has been so large that the hotels could not accommodate all of the visitors, and many of them were provided for in private homes, by a special committee headed by J. D. Sedgwick, and Ira Rodamar. Other splendid features of the entertainment provided for the visiting bankers, have been cared for by J. D. Easton, P. J. Martin, F. F. McElhinny, and C. Schultz. Each of these gentlemen headed a separate committee, composed of bankers and business men of Waterloo, and to every unoccupied moment of the visiting delegates was offered some form of amusement or entertainment. The principal addresses elsewhere in this edition.

Group One, Illinois, at Aledo

Aledo, Ill., June 8.—Group One, Illinois bankers met here to-day, every county being represented. A. J. Jackson of Morrison, who was elected chairman for the coming year, presided. The address of welcome was delivered by K. M. Whitham of Aledo.

The Chicagoans who delivered addresses were: John Fletcher of the Drovers' Deposit National; Ralph C. Wilson, Bankers' National; W. G. Edens, Central Trust Company; Daniel Norman, Commercial National; Charles F. Fishback.

E. R. Guernsey of the Fremont National of Nebraska, delivered an address, in which he condemned the system of bank guaranty now used in Oklahoma and to be enforced in Nebraska. Mr. Guernsey also argued that national banks should be allowed more latitude in the matter of note circulation.

After the business meeting dinner was served at the Merchant's hotel at which Judge H. E. Burgess acted as toastmaster. Speeches were made by J. L. Vernon, ex-State's Attorney W. J. Graham, and others.

The Chicagoans left this evening in a special car to attend the Peoria meeting.

The following resolution was adopted by acclaim and its echo will be heard at the big Decatur convention:

Resolved, That the members of Group Number One of the Bankers Association of the state of Illinois, in convention assembled, heartily endorse the proposed Phillips amendment which was introduced at the state convention held in Chicago, last October, providing that hereafter members of the executive council and vice-presidents of the state organization shall be selected at the group meetings, and furthermore that the ex-presidents shall continue as members of the council but three years following their retirement from the office of president. Be it further

Resolved, That in accordance with the spirit of this resolution, that we recommend one member for the council and two vice-presidents.

For the ex-council the meeting endorsed S. R. Amlong, of the Aledo Bank, Aledo, and for the vice-presidents, H. O. Bauer, cashier of the State Bank at New Boston, and J. Y. Whiteman, cashier of the First National at Biggsville.

L. D. Skinner

L. D. Skinner, assistant cashier of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, will represent that bank at the Iowa Bankers convention at Waterloo. Mr. Skinner is a native of Iowa, having been born on a farm in Keokuk county. Prior to coming to Chicago, Mr. Skinner had a number of years banking experience at Creston, Iowa, and later at Wichita, Kansas. He has been with the Central Trust Company of Illinois since its organization in 1902.

Group Two, Illinois

Peoria, Ill., June 9.—Before the fifth annual banquet of Group Two, Bankers Association of Illinois, here this afternoon, L. A. Goddard, president of the State Bank of Chicago, delivered an address on "Money." He spoke against the idea of postal savings banks on the grounds that the system might cramp the country in times of stringency. The speaker also opposed the theory of guaranty for bank deposits, which system he stated put the "wildcat" banker on a par with the substantial conservative banker. He drew lessons from the financial panic of 1907, and dwelt at length on the moral influence of the banker and of money.

The association elected the following officers:

President—E. A. Heald, Canton, Ill.

Vice-president—F. F. Blossom, Peoria, Ill.

Secretary—W. C. White, Peoria, Ill.

Treasurer—A. D. McCullough, Varna, Ill.

The business sessions were held at the Creve Coeur Club and the banquet at the

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THE Pittsburgh "Money" is about the tenth banking paper to show its appreciation of this department by starting a "Mainly About" feature of its own. It is better than most of them. But then they do not have an Emersonian scissor grinder for an editor.

OUR shopmates in New York jump about so much from one paper to another that the editors now give out "general delivery" addresses and the advertising solicitors take contracts in their own names only, to be delivered to the publisher they may happen to be with when they return to the Metropolis. Some of the bounty jumpers have accumulated so many titles (solicitors are never less than vice-presidents or associate editors) that they walk stooped over.

THE Progressive Young Bankers of the United States" is a fine title line which is making quite a hit in the American Banker. Unfortunately several of the young spot lighters lost their jobs just after seeing their biographies in print, so that some think there is a hoodoo connected with it. There may have been, but George Woodruff (see series xvii) will break it. No one but himself can do any discharging around his bank, so he's all right.

WISCONSIN is a daisy state when it comes to putting illegitimate banking on the back shelf—so far back they think it is night all the time. The new banking bill provides heavy penalties for any person, co-partnership or corporation doing a banking business without first taking out a state or national bank charter and that is about all that is necessary, being about as effective as electrocution.

EVERYONE will be glad to learn that John H. Puelicher has recovered so as to be able to sail for America. His European visit has benefited him, although he is not likely to resume active bank work for a while. No man could have stepped out of Milwaukee banking circles who would have been so generally missed on account of his wonderful activities in civic, business, and social affairs.

W. J. KOMMERS of the Old National, Spokane, is in Chicago conferring with the architects of their new bank building. The fact is he has spent a month visiting all the crack banks of the states with a view to arranging the most perfect interior possible as to cages, counters, lighting and ventilation. The bankers of Chicago, and of every other city visited, extended him a glad hand, allowing measurements and photographs to be taken where desired. He's a strong booster for Spokane also.

M. R. KOMMERS thinks the Chapter boys who go on the big Milwaukee special to the Seattle convention would have done better to stop over a day in Spokane, rather than in Minneapolis, which has been or may be visited any time. Good logic, too, in this. But then it was Minneapolis where the chapter movement was born and Joseph Chapman, Jr., is its very own Godfather. So there is another reason.

A. V. LANE is the new Texan on the A. B. A. council. He will need very few introductions when he turns in his credentials.

DON'T forget that the William Livingstone campaign for the place to be vacated by Mr. Watts is quietly on and that his hosts of friends are active. No other state is actively looking for it and the fitness of the able Michigander is admitted on all sides.

THE eloquent E. D. Durham, of Onarga, Ills., is intending to try to fill some of the many speaking appointments offered but fears (and many hope) they all will be extemporaneous. That is a field where he has few equals. To the "Cashier" he sends this comforting telegram "Say, brother, you are hitting it up in great shape in THE CHICAGO BANKER. Keep it up. I believe, in the main, you are usually right. That is saying considerable."

WE have it from D. E. Hartwell that Swift & Co. dividends are to keep right along, with never a cloud on the horizon.

EDWARD F. LARSON, who sits on the safety-valve of the First National at Britt, Iowa, is certain that he can tell the difference between a cow and an automobile, but some of his friends doubt it. The story is that he mixed the bran mash for his Jersey with 76 degree gasoline and filled his racer's tank with cold water. The car wouldn't "go" but the cow is "going" yet—or was at last report.

W. R. DAWES has been elected president of the North Side State Savings Bank, one of the promising institutions in the outer Chicago belt.

POSTAL CARD checks is the latest thing out. See this week's issue for particulars. They would make fine money orders.

MANY who read this column from habit have heard Pollard of Ft. Madison at conventions, and elsewhere, and to many he may appear to be too eloquent, too humorous and light hearted to be a serious banker. Never was greater mistake made. His bank is a model and it is said that he has a complete credit card index of the responsibility of the farmers in his part of the state. The great Quincy sage, at one time, said it was the finest thing of the kind in existence. The next paragraph is from a leaflet sent out by Mr. Pollard and is adaptable to banks coming up to any or all of the requirements.

"This bank is under state supervision and is examined regularly by the state bank examiners. The directors actually direct its affairs, approve all of its investments and at least six times each year make a thorough examination of the bank, certifying to the value of its assets over their signatures. This bank is doing both a commercial and savings business under conservative management; it is steadily increasing in resources and offers to the public prompt and efficient service, wholly adequate for legitimate requirements. The officers actively employed in this bank are bonded in reliable surety companies. Our vault is protected by the American Bank Protection Company's Electrical Steel Linings and Alarms. We carry full insurance against burglary and hold-ups."

OWING to the calling of a special session of the Washington legislature, Governor Hay will not be able to welcome in person the bankers who will attend the tri-state convention at Seattle.

Governor Carroll's Plain Talk at Waterloo

His work as former banking commissioner has convinced him that better banking supervision, rather than currency reform, will be the only substitute the public will accept in lieu of guaranty of deposits or postal banks—Iowa's governor a well posted, practical bank reformer.

GOVERNOR B. F. CARROLL
Des Moines, Iowa

I am delighted to be able to meet with you again. It is the first time that I have had the opportunity to address you since the "late unpleasantness" of one year ago last October and November better known perhaps as the panic of 1907. I am glad that you are all here. I entertained some anxiety during those days lest some of you might fall by the wayside. Those were rather trying times. In other words, I feared lest some of you might "pass in your checks." You know there were people who took exceptions because they couldn't pass their checks in and have them honored. I think, however, upon the whole it is rather a high compliment to the banking interests of our state that everything passed off so well and that no depositor lost a dollar in Iowa by reason of any bank failure the direct cause of which could be traced to the so-called panic.

I am somewhat at a loss to know just what to say to you upon this occasion as I have talked to so many gatherings of bankers that I have said about all that has occurred to me that I think would be of interest to you. In many of my talks and in my published reports as auditor of state, which placed me ex-officio at the head of the banking department of the state, I have advocated some banking legislation which in my judgment would be beneficial, some of which suggestions have been enacted into law and some have not. I think I am warranted in saying to you that no law relative to banking has been enacted since I went into the auditor's office but what its workings have proven very satisfactory and I believe no legislation has been recommended but what if enacted into law would prove equally satisfactory. I am still of the opinion that some legislation might be enacted that would bring about better banking conditions and would at the same time increase the confidence of the people generally in our banks but I do not know of many things in the way of legislation the lack of the enactment of which, is causing any serious injury or injustice, and yet I believe that the apparently increasing demand upon the part of the people for better protection to the depositors must be heeded or some of the proposed questionable legislation, as it appears to you and to me, will find its way into the statute books of the nation and of the states.

It has been my privilege as well as my duty to examine into and investigate the cause for some of the drastic legislation pertaining to banks, insurance, etc., and my observation has been that in most instances it has resulted from abuses practiced by the concerns sought to be regulated. Had these abuses been checked or regulated at an early date less stringent laws might have accomplished the purpose equally as well. I am aware of the fact that there are those among you who feel that too strict supervision by the nation or the state works a hardship, but I submit to you the statement that it would be better for all concerned if the bankers themselves would turn their attention more to the question of proper regulation and less to the question of a modification of the currency. In my opinion the demand for legislation providing for postal savings banks and guaranteed deposits is the outgrowth of a lack of confidence in the efficiency of our laws regulating banks and protecting the individual in his deposits. Nothing short of that which gives the depositor the highest degree of protection possible will ever satisfy our people, and so long as the belief prevails that here is something better and more secure than what we now have there will be a clamor for it. The only reason that there is a demand for guaranteed deposits laws, aside from the capital which the demagogue seeks to make of it, is the lack of confidence in our present system. In my judgment the only way to meet the demand is to meet it with laws providing for strict supervision which the people will accept as being effective. This suggestion you will perhaps recognize as being a sort of a hobby with me but I find that many others are coming to think along the same lines. Had our laws been so framed and our system of regulation in the past been so effective as to prevent, so far as is possible under the most perfect system, bank failures, what could have brought some of the proposed measures into prominence.

The so-called panic of 1907 is doubtless the cause of much of the agitation of recent months and while the panic brought with it hardships and raised many perplexing questions it was not without its benefits and blessings. The cause of the panic is about as much a mooted question as the proper remedy for panics. Since I have never been able to fully convince myself as to what caused it I have never felt much like trying to convince any one else, but my judgment is that stripped of all unnecessary verbiage the word "speculation" comes as near telling the entire story as volumes of argument. I remember to have inquired of a leading New York official, just while the panic was at its highest tension in the East, as to the immediate cause of it and his answer was that it was precipitated by the legitimate banks and banking interests of New York City in an effort to relieve themselves of plungers of the Heinze type, which is perhaps as charitable a view of the situation as could be taken and yet I am not sure but it is about as rational a suggestion as has been offered. I have never shared strongly in the view that it was caused by agitation. I believe something more real than imagination was at the bottom of the disturbance. I need but call your attention to conditions in your own various communities in order to secure a response to the suggestion, for you will all testify that many hundreds of men were using their credit to the limit and adding a little to be sure that they had reached the limit. Some were on "tip-toe" and others clear off of the earth.

You have all, during your boyhood days, stood and tossed a ball up against the side of the house or the barn and caught it on the rebound. You know you can soon gauge the force with which you sling it to the rebound of the ball so that you can throw it almost an unlimited number of times and catch it without moving out of your tracks. Everything goes all right so long as you keep the proper force behind the ball. If you increase it a little you can still catch the ball if you reach up. A little more and you will have to tip-toe. Still a little more and you will have to jump into the air. Yet a little more and the ball will go clear over you or you will have to back up. Then occupying a new position it becomes necessary to readjust the force of the sling. The trouble in 1907 was there was too much force behind the ball, too much speculation, and it got to going over the head. You had to back up and readjust. It taught us all a lesson, that is, that it is safer and better to be sure that you are catching the ball all of the time, making a reasonable and steady profit continually, than it is to tip-toe part of the time and then have to back up or readjust. But the lesson learned was not without its benefits. You found it necessary to take the people into your confidence and you found that the people could be trusted. It does no harm to let the people know something of the real inside work of banking. When they have a better understanding of things they are less liable to become panicky. You learned that the people are not so fearful as to just what kind of money or credits are used after all, as they accepted the clearing house certificate and the cashier's checks much more readily than you had expected. This fact has allayed some fears that I formerly entertained as to the results that would probably follow an effort to reconcile individual accounts with a bank. I feared that the people would not fully understand the purpose and that the result would be a withdrawal of deposits. The way in which the people received the plans adopted in 1907 leads me to believe that there is little doubt but that they will accept and adjust themselves to any proper and reasonable plan that might be adopted for the better regulation of the banking business as a whole.

There is another suggestion which I want to offer touching directly upon the relation of the banks and the department. I would not encourage the thought of one bank's "knocking" upon another, but there is a community of interests among bankers that fully justifies the one in observing and even in reporting upon the irregularities of another, if such irregularities are likely to lead to disaster and consequently to injury to the business generally. I know of my own experience that we were by reason of information furnished by other banks, enabled to correct practices that doubtless would have proven disastrous, and in other instances had bankers conveyed to the department in a proper manner, such things as they knew, other failures might have been prevented.

I suggest these things as a protection to the business of banking in general and as a perfectly legitimate and proper thing to be done for the general welfare of all concerned.

There is another familiar thought that I would like to suggest to you, as I believe its solution rests largely with you, that is, the need and the probability of trust company legislation. I have repeatedly suggested the necessity for legislation for the regulation of loan and trust companies, and while some fairly good bills have been before the legislature they have, so far, failed to pass. If you will pardon a pointed suggestion I will say that in my opinion you folks, some of you at least, are to blame for this failure. So far as I am aware, all will admit that some legislation bearing on this subject ought to be enacted but when a bill is offered objections are raised by one or another class of interests and nothing comes of the proposed legislation. Few states in the union have so crude trust company laws as ours, and it seems to me that common interest demands that some reasonable measure should be enacted. I would suggest that a committee of your own membership be raised to prepare and present to the next session of the legislature some practical measure with reference to trust companies, but the unanimity or rather the lack of unanimity with which you have heretofore acted with reference to this subject, raises a question in my mind as to the probable result of such an attempt.

I have said to you that in my opinion it would be more profitable to the bankers to turn their attention to a better regulation of banks than to a reformation of the currency. I do not mean to be understood as in any manner depreciating the importance of securing some form of elastic currency, or a currency that will respond to the needs and requirements of legitimate banking, but I cannot escape the conclusion that strictly legitimate banking requires less elasticity than is required to take up the recoil that is likely to result from over reaching or from too large a use of credit.

I have believed and still believe that an elastic currency will be more difficult to adjust to our system of banking than to that of some other countries, in part, because of the character and form of our various banking institutions, our general monetary system, and also because of our diversified methods of supervision and regulation or rather the lack of them. The problem would be much less difficult of solution if we had but a single class or kind of banks, and a single individual or department to supervise and control them instead of having as many departments as we have states and various kinds of banks in the different states some with one method of supervision and some with another. The discussion as to methods for the establishment of an elastic currency has brought out more or less of sentiment in favor of a central bank, but practically every one who seems to believe in such an institution prefaces his remarks with the statement that our people will never adopt such a plan. Consequently the only thing left is to work out of the present plan some method whereby a so-called automatic currency can be provided. One of the points emphasized by some of the advocates of an elastic currency is that it shall be practically of the same form as our present currency, the thought being to avoid the arousing of suspicion among the people. While it would perhaps be more desirable to have it so it appears to me that this is a matter of small consequence, as our people have become used to various forms of currency and readily accept any and all of them with little or no hesitancy and, in my judgment, would not be seriously disturbed by the appearance of a new form. Then too our people with all the present facilities for gaining information are not going to be long in finding out that a new bill, regardless of its provisions or appearance is being circulated. If all or many of the banks were simultaneously to put into circulation a particular form of money and then all at the same time should withdraw it, the fact of its appearance might suggest danger, but the probabilities are that various banks, for different reasons, and at various times would resort to the use of the new form of currency, and more or less of it would be appearing and being retired constantly so that the people would soon forget that it is an emergency currency. To me the very important thing is not so much the appearance of the bills nor the method of getting them into circulation, because, necessity you know is the "mother of invention," and a way would be found to get the currency into circulation, but the really important thing is how to retire it when once put out so as to avoid inflation and the consequent need of some avoidance or relief from the evil effects resulting therefrom. It is conceded by all, I think, that under ordinary circumstances there is little need of an increase in the volume of our money, it therefore logically follows that when the abnormal condition has passed by we should return to the normal or ordinary volume of money and, that to me seems to be the most difficult question that must be dealt with. Absolute and urgent necessity should be the controlling influence to bring forth an issue of emergency currency, and it should be so taxed as to render it unprofitable or less profitable than ordinary banking, so as to insure a speedy retirement as normal or ordinary business conditions are resumed.

Notwithstanding all the talk regarding an elastic currency and credit money, a central bank or the separate institutions system, but little criticism can be passed as to our forms of money, and its character is such as to hold the confidence of the public. I am optimistic enough to believe that time, even without a new form of currency, but through proper regulation and by the efforts of the bankers themselves, will work out a practical solution of most of the now perplexing questions.

I feel like congratulating you as I have often done upon the extent and character of the banking business in our state. We have been

Stronger Vaults

James W. Donnell, head of the Donnell Safe Co., of this city, and a safe and vault expert of national reputation, gives it as his opinion that an era of better and stronger safes for banks already has set in. Double sheet-iron boxes, spaces filled with glass wool and fire clay are but a temptation to the yeggmen to step in after dark and "blow" them. As proof that stronger cash boxes are demanded Mr. Donnell says: "We are building a large vault for the Stock Yards Savings Bank, of Chicago, with all of our latest patents. It has two heavy entrances with seven-inch doors. The vaults are divided into a cash vault, book vault, and a separate safe deposit vault. They are fitting up the new room on the corner of Halsted and entrance of the Stock Yards, and the safe work will cost them in the neighborhood of twenty-five thousand dollars.

"We also received an order this week for a large heavy round door vault entrance, with safe deposit boxes, safes, etc., amounting to forty thousand dollars, for the Millikin National Bank, Decatur, Ill. We are also putting in an outfit for O. B. Conklin & Co., real estate, on Lincoln Avenue. This consists of a large safe deposit vault entrance, weighing about 36,000 lbs. They are fitting the vault up with a fine assortment of safe deposit boxes, etc.

"We also received an order from the Trevett-Mattis Banking Company, Champaign, Ill., for a large safe deposit and bank vault including boxes, safes, etc., amounting to twelve thousand dollars and have just finished a vault for the First National Bank of Joliet which was completed in all details the first of the month. These vaults are all latest construction."

The Donnell Company enjoys the confidence of bankers, both at home and abroad, and are in an enviable position owing to their steel rail vault construction patents, designed and owned by Mr. Donnell. It is the one form of construction which is completely unassailable by burglars, and indestructible by time, fire, or earthquake.

About Illinois Bankers

D. E. Gayer, Cashier of the Monmouth National Bank, Monmouth, Illinois, spent Sunday at Aurora with his nephew, Bobby Lee of the Monroe National Bank. The Monmouth National have recently increased their capital to $200,000.00, taking $100,000.00 from their surplus. This makes them rank as one of the strongest national banks located on the Burlington system between Chicago and Omaha, in point of capital, surplus and deposits.

William Rupp, of Quincy, Illinois, visited Chicago Monday and Tuesday. Mr. Rupp announces that all of the work in connection with the remodeling of their banking room is progressing nicely, and that they expect to open the Illinois State Bank of Quincy on July 1st. J. H. Best, a dealer in plumbers' supplies and a former mayor of Quincy, will be president, and W. J. Singleton, who is interested in the State Bank of Nauvoo, Illinois, will be vice-president, and Mr. Rupp, cashier. The capital will be $125,000.00. Mr. Rupp comes from an old Illinois banking family, he and his brother being interested in the First National Bank of Mt. Pulaski. In 1893 he assisted in the organization of the State Bank of Nauvoo, the first incorporated bank to be established in this historic old town. About 1900 he went to Benton Harbor, Michigan, and remained there for a number of years as cashier of the Benton Harbor State Bank. While thus engaged he was tendered the cashiership of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company, and remained with this institution about one year, resigning in 1908. He afterwards traveled extensively throughout the United States and finally decided on Quincy as a good location for a new bank.

E. K. Dilworth, cashier of the Peoples Bank of Vermont, Illinois, was a visitor in Chicago on Tuesday.

F. E. Shaffmaster

F. E. Shaffmaster, formerly president of the Waterville State Savings Bank, Waterville, Ohio, and a former Chicagoan, is now secretary and treasurer of the Citizens Bank & Trust Company, Conneaut, Ohio. Mr. Shaffmaster was active in the work of organizing the Ohio association into groups.

Group Three, Illinois

Freeport, Ill.—Members of Group Three of the Illinois Bankers Association, who assembled here in convention last week, expressed a belief that business conditions are rapidly improving and that the financial situation is becoming more rosy.

L. A. Goddard, president of the State Bank of Chicago, in speaking of the Aldrich-Vreeland currency law, quoted with seeming approval a story of Champ Clark. This concerned a man who had been strung up by a vigilance committee and who had a placard pinned on him bearing the legend: "This was a bad man in some respects and worse in others."

The following officers were elected:

President, William O. Wright, Freeport; secretary-treasurer, Omar H. Wright, Belvidere.

Executive committee: W. C. Durkes, Dixon; George Ault, Kirkland; J. M. Clark, Freeport; W. F. Woodruff, Rockford; R. H. Campbell, Mount Carroll; C. S. Merrick, Galena; C. L. Robertson, Forreston; A. E. Loop, Belvidere.

Waterloo Convention

Your secretary sent out an unusually large amount of correspondence, generally, this year, but more particularly in an endeavor to increase the membership. Together with the active assistance of the secretary, besides arranging for group meetings and preparing programs therefor, it has heretofore been the special work of the group officers to solicit new members. In this work the secretary has done his best to aid. This year, however, with the approval of the group officers, the secretary, in his own way, made a special and successful endeavor to increase the membership and he has succeeded. After this success, his assistant, W. J. Elliott, prepared and sent out over the secretary's signature, another special effort, which of itself added 50 or 60 members to those already secured. The question is whether we have as yet reached the limit of memberships. The total increase has been 180 bringing the membership up to over 1,350 and making our association without question the largest in membership of any of the state associations. Your secretary wants to state that no commissions whatever come to him for these new members. There are about fifty bankers of this state doing business over the counters of other banks, such for instance as a savings bank doing business over the counter of a national bank. Only 15 of these banks have been willing to pay their proportion of the benefits received and become members. The others, including some banks in the larger cities, abundantly able to pay the expense, prefer to give their associated banks the benefit through the fee and the dues paid by the one bank. This, I argue, is not right, in as much as it, and every such bank has a thoroughly separate organization; its own board of directors and its own officers, although such banks may sometimes have the same officers or directors. Each bank makes its own reports; one, to the government, the other to the state and no doubt pays its own expenses and declares its own dividends, and it seems to me these ought to join in paying the expenses of the association. If there were no other way to oblige them to do this, I would suggest that the articles be amended to provide that where there are two banks doing business over one counter and but one of those banks becomes a member, that the dues from that bank should be ten dollars per year and that because of these dues the benefits would be tendered to both and both might be called members.

J. M. DINWIDDIE
Secretary Iowa Bankers Association

You will remember that two years ago you put the insurance work on the secretary. Your secretary has not made the insurance his principal work, although he has endeavored to keep the membership well advised, and to take care of such applications as came in. The result has been that the banks of the state, besides having uniform and reasonable rates, have received back practically $800 in commissions, and that the protective fund has been increased by nearly that amount, because of the commissions retained by the association; not one cent of the commission going to the secretary, and no additional expense to the association, except for postage, there having been no provision made by you for stenographer, nor for any extra help required by the secretary, either because of this or because of the growth of the association, and your secretary has paid such extra help personally.

There is now in force $1,100,000 in burglary insurance and $550,000 in fidelity bonds.

I want to warn the bankers that our contract with the National Surety Company expires next year, but during this year, for a bond, or insurance for any length of time up to three years, the present rates will apply. I am credibly informed that after the expiration of our contract any new contract will have to be made on increased rates, both fidelity and burglary. In fact, it would be hard for an Iowa banker to get a fidelity bond now, of any other company than ours, at the rate we pay. Inasmuch as we were unfortunate in not including in our contract the writing of depositary bonds, you who have had experience in getting such as you know well, have had to pay for such depositary bonds, double the premium paid two years ago. I would urge that the members take advantage of our arrangement with the National Surety Company and take their burglary insurance and fidelity bonds of that company and through the secretary of the association. We ought to multiply this business many times over this year, but the association ought to pay some of the expense of doing it.

There has been no complaint of the work done by our time-lock expert, J. W. Loyer, of Newton, Iowa. There is, however, a feeling throughout the state that the cleaning of these locks should be more nearly annually, if not quite so, and that there should not be such long waits between times. A number of the bankers in the state have suggested that they would prefer to have the expert call on them regularly than to have to ask for his services from time to time. Mr. Loyer has a large field to cover and has problems to work out in covering it that are not present in any other state. He has thus far been unable to procure proper assistance so as to assure cleaning of the locks more often. He, however, is here to speak for himself and will be called on at the right time. I would not feel that I should refrain from again urging you to still support this arrangement. There is no other state in the union that enjoys a six dollar rate for the cleaning of time-locks, $9 being the smallest fee any bank pays through any other state association.

The Iowa bankers have been somewhat criticised by some, including a few members of the legislature, for not knowing what they want in the way of legislation, and for not getting together and deciding what that is and then working for it. Our legislative committee, of which D. H. McKee of Davenport was appointed chairman, gave attention to the matter of legislation.

We again insist that the desire of the Iowa Bankers Association is for nothing but wholesome legislation and that it is more interested in the prevention of unwise or unfair legislation than it is in promoting anything else, or anything that might be other than fair to self or other interests, and to that end and only that, it addressed itself. It is the feeling of large numbers of the bankers of the state that inasmuch as the legislature is composed of men who are just as deeply interested in correct legislation, and inasmuch as the legislature has in it men from all walks of life, including many interested in banking, who are just as capable of judging of what ought to and what ought not to become a law, as are many bankers at home, that it is not the proper thing for the bankers to interfere too much in legislative work.

The protective feature of our work has not required much attention this year. There was a successful bank burglary at Imogene, Iowa, one of the perpetrators of which was arrested and convicted and sent to the penitentiary for a number of years, and another since arrested, but not yet tried. For the arrest and conviction of these burglars, there is a claim for the reward of $1,000, offered by this association. Parties interested have issued a request that it be paid in a certain division, as they have agreed upon. In this instance, however, under the circumstances, the association cannot be forced to pay because the reward is offered for the arrest and conviction of anyone committing a burglary against a member in good standing, while the bank of Imogene had been requested more than once to remit dues, which was at the time of the burglary nine months delinquent, and has not yet, up to this time, reinstated itself.

There was a successful burglary of a bank at Badger, where the loss was $1,500. One of the burglars was arrested May 16th, through our own special detectives and will be convicted.

There have been few forged checks passed, but forgers or swindlers have been successful in raising money from several banks by clever efforts on forged drafts or telegrams. However, the state has been reasonably free from serious trouble of this kind.

At the meeting of the executive council at Waterloo in March last, the secretary was authorized to draw an order for $50 per month until further orders, to remit to Chas. R. Frost, Minneapolis, secretary of the Minnesota Bankers Association and treasurer of the Inter State Protective Association, for the purpose of employing a special detective to work out these cases of fraud in the states of Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota and Michigan. I have with me the report made by this special detective concerning several matters which he has investigated and I believe the investment of $50 per month for this purpose is not a bad one, and shall hope that you will not recall the authority for making this remittance. The reports made by this party are at your service if you care to read them.

The groups of the association have held meetings during the year with a total of 1,000 in attendance. The increase of membership by groups was 180.

The secretary reserves the right to add such new members as may be received at this meeting.

The executive council hopes you will approve its work and the work of your officers and that the program may prove an enjoyable one and the occasion of this meeting a profitable one.

As your secretary, I wish to again express my appreciation of your uniform consideration and courtesy, and to extend to the large number of new members his thanks for so liberally responding to his solicitations.

Express Companies

Nathan B. Williams, a young lawyer, of Fayetteville, Ark., in his researches into the history and workings of the United States post-office department recently made the astounding discovery that, according to his interpretation of the constitution of the United States and certain acts of Congress, a very large proportion of the mail matter in this country is being transported in direct violation of law.

Section 3982 of the Revised Statutes of the United States makes it unlawful for any one to establish a private express for the carriage of letters or packets over any postroad of the United States or between any city, town or place between which the mail is regularly carried, and yet this is precisely what the express companies are doing every day in the year.

Mr. Williams finds that a large proportion of the mail other than the first-class is now carried by the great express companies in competition with the post-office department.

A general attack on the system of management of the principal express companies doing business throughout the country has been started by State Senator B. E. Sundberg of Minnesota.

Senator Sundberg has lodged a complaint with the interstate commerce commission at Washington in which he declares the American, Adams, and United States Express companies have formed themselves into an illegal monopoly for the control of the express business throughout the United States, and that they are conducting such a monopoly in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act of 1887. He asks the commission to break up the monopoly and fix a schedule of prices for the express business which will bear a fair relation to the cost of transportation.

J. M. Dinwiddie

It is strictly proper that the oldest state secretary should have the largest state association. No one minds if he brags about it a little either. This is the modest little toot emitted from the secretarial horn by J. M. Dinwiddie of Iowa:

"Our association is in splendid condition. It seems to me it has never been in better condition. The membership has been growing this year, and at our convention to be held in Waterloo, June 10th and 11th, we will report a growth that will be applauded without question. The secretary is happy in being able to report this and more than glad to be able to show 'in all these years' a continuous growth until he is now showing the largest association in the United States, and one run with perhaps the least friction and accomplishing as much as any possibly could. I want to thank the membership in general for their continued and unanimous support of my efforts."

One thing continues to worry Mr. Dinwiddie, and that is that Iowa bankers persist in cashing fake checks "after all these years" of his remonstrance. By means of forged telegrams and forged orders to buy horses, etc., etc., the thing, he says, has become epidemic. Why a banker should prefer a fake check to the money, Mr. Dinwiddie cannot make out.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

That bankers and business men in the Twin Cities are somewhat ignorant of conditions in Montana, so near at hand and in tributary commercial territory, may seem strange to bankers in other parts of the country but the three bankers on the trip which Minneapolis merchants made by special train last week over the C. M. & St. P. extension and on the Northern Pacific road returning admit that every one was astonished at the promised fertility of the Montana soil. Stanley H. Bezoier, assistant cashier of the Security National Bank, says that it was a revelation to him. "Of course we are familiar with western Dakota," he said, "but none of us was prepared for what we saw in Montana. We thought that Montana was a state of rocks, but the Judith valley or basin, is a wonderful country. They can raise anything there. It is a fertile, promising country. The trip will be of as much benefit to the Montana people as it is to the Minneapolis men, because they couldn't buy the advertising they have gotten from this trip. You couldn't hire fifty-five men to get out the way we did, but now that we have gone we shall not get done talking about the new country."

H. A. Willoughby of the First National and C. W. Farwell of the Northwestern National, were in the party. They confirm Mr. Bezoier's talk. The business men are going to have a meeting at once and impress upon the other jobbers and manufacturers the need of getting their traveling salesmen into the country at once. The Minneapolis men met the delegation from the Chicago Association of Commerce at Lewiston, Mont.

Bankers to Build Homes

George B. Lane, commercial paper, is going to build a fine residence. Mr. Lane bought two years ago a lot on Clifton Avenue, a short "upper ten" street, on which building lots are now at a premium, and practically out of the market. His building permit is for $30,000, but it is said that the house will go to $50,000. It will be of an English type, and even the windows will be English, the iron frames having been ordered from Birmingham.

J. S. Pomeroy, cashier of the Security National, has nearly completed a residence at Lake Minnetonka. It will not be completed until after the Minnesota convention, but will be ready to point out to the steamer excursionists as they skirt the Ferndale shore.

Harry Rubey, the Macon banker, is still sticking to Lake Minnetonka as a summer residence. Mr. Rubey is a confirmed Minnetonkan as he has been there summers a quarter of a century, nearly. The fact that he is coming back is revealed in the entries for the power boat races this summer. The old boat, so well known to visiting bankers, is entered, and another one which Mr. Rubey is building, and whose speed and capacity has not yet been announced.

Escape for Yeggmen Impossible

That it is a hopeless task for yeggmen who operate in the five Northwestern states to get away from the detectives of the Interstate Protective Association, after they have committed a bank robbery, is becoming generally known in the dynamitard profession. A bit of testimony is as follows: Banks at Imogene and Badger, Iowa, were robbed, the former the latter part of April and the latter early in May. About the same time an attempt was made on the bank at Ostrander, Minn. From the Imogene bank $4,000 was taken and from the Badger bank, $800. To-day the men charged with the crime are in jail and much of the money has been recovered, all through the pertinacity and the "system" of the association. The men arrested are bad ones, if they have not reformed. One of them is Harry Lyttle-George Lytle-Harry Miller-Tom Kelly-Ed. Lane-Nebraska Harry-Iowa Blackie. He has a record of two men. The other is Abner H. Hicks or Abner Hearst, a member of the old Quimby gang.

Manager C. R. Frost at the Minneapolis office told the chief detective of the organization to go to Iowa and stay on the assignment until

It was discovered that Hicks had $600 on deposit in the Colorado National at Denver and Blackie $400 in a safety deposit vault at Sioux City. Both sums have been attached.

Naturally the association detectives, nor Mr. Frost, are telling what their system is, but Mr. Frost calls attention to the fact that it is successful. It has become a difficult job for the yeggmen to work banks in the small towns of the states in the association and beat the detectives. Some of the professionals have indicated their purpose to quit.

Minnesota Program

A., New York, "Problems of the American Bankers Association." F. I. Kent, vice-president Bankers Trust company, New York, "The American Bankers Association Travelers Checks." O. J. Schumacher, Capital National of St. Paul, L. E. Wakefield, Northwestern National, Minneapolis; G. H. McCarthy, First National, Duluth, fifteen minute talks, representing the three banking clerk chapters. W. I. Prince, cashier City National of Duluth, will report on the A. B. A. meeting at Denver. D. S. Culver is the retiring member of the executive council of the A. B. A. and Mr. Culver, J. M. Haven of Big Lake, J. A. Latta of Minneapolis and L. A. Huntoon of Moorhead are the retiring members of the state council. F. E.

Holton, cashier of the Northwestern National, has charge of the registration desk at the Tonka Bay hotel. The entertainment will be a regular "blowout" at Big Island on the afternoon of the first day and a vaudeville performance in the evening. A chartered boat will make excursions to the island and around the lakes the second afternoon for the accommodation of the bankers. G. F. Orde, J. S. Pomeroy, F. E. Holton and C. R. Frost form the entertainment committee.

To Bring Suit for State's Money

The attorney-general, for the state treasurer, is preparing to bring suit against Hennepin county to recover $16,068, the state's share of money in banks which failed in 1893. Between the payment of taxes and returns to the state the money is placed in banks. In the year mentioned $391,936 was involved. The last payment was in 1902, leaving the amount sued for. The statute of limitation may be involved.

The Chicago A. B. A. Convention

Practically every state secretary has reserved headquarters rooms with adequate sleeping rooms for a full state delegation to the big American Bankers convention to convene in Chicago, September 13th-18th. Secretary Farnsworth predicts a record-breaker, and President Reynolds says it looks as if lots of banks will close that week if every one is to come who wants to come. This active gentleman has accepted the chairmanship of the local committee, and on the committee with him are representatives of the principal clearing house banks. Mr. Reynolds has asked Comptroller Murray to speak and probably none other than J. B. Forgan will welcome the visitors "to our city." The general committee appointed by President Talbert of the clearing house includes George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental National and president of the American Bankers Association, as general chairman; Joseph T. Talbert, vice-president of the Commercial National and president of the Chicago clearing house; David R. Forgan, president of the National City; Charles G. Dawes, president of the Central Trust; August Blum, vice-president of the First National; W. T. Fenton, vice-president of the National Bank of the Republic; S. R. Flynn, president of the Live Stock Exchange National; John J. Abbott, vice-president of the American Trust and Savings, and B. C. Sammons, assistant cashier of the Corn Exchange National.

All the general plans and the naming of working subcommittees will be in charge of this general committee which in turn will report direct to the clearing house.

Only in the most general way has the plan of entertainment of the delegates and guests of the convention been considered. Every possible facility will be arranged to allow them to see the various points of interest in and about the city. The regular sessions of the convention will be held in the Auditorium, and the Annex has been selected as the official headquarters. It is the intention to have as many public functions as can be arranged for a crowd of 4,000 or 5,000 people. One of the entertainments suggested is an evening excursion on the lake, for which a couple of the largest boats will be engaged; another is an evening band concert at one of the country clubs near the city, probably the South Shore, and still another is a ball to be given in the Auditorium if the arrangements for it can be made.

An important new feature of this convention will be the first annual banquet of the Council Club, composed of all ex-members of the executive council of the association. It is proposed to bring these ex-chieftains together at each convention on the evening that the active members of the council hold their annual banquet. W. T. Fenton is the chairman of the banquet committee for the Council Club, and will be assisted by all ex-councilmen resident in Chicago. Joseph H.

The big committee of which Mr. Reynolds is chairman will be divided so that each of the nine members will be chairman of a special committee to have charge of some particular branch of the convention work and will be held responsible for it. No appropriation has been made to bear the expenses of the convention, as it is not known as yet what it will cost, but the banks of the city have expressed their willingness to divide the cost, whatever it may be, of a first-class entertainment.

Bankers of the country will do well to make early arrangements for rooms, so that all may be conveniently and comfortably located. The new La Salle Hotel will be finished and many bankers will go there. Soon a committee will be organized to make reservations for intending visitors not previously cared for. It will be the top-notch of all big A. B. A. conventions, and being centrally located will clear all records for attendance at a bound.

The Iowa Bankers Association

So far as we know Secretary Dinwiddie has rounded up the largest number of bankers for the Iowa association, ever gotten together in one state organization. He tops Illinois and Missouri and makes some of the Eastern state associations look like an overgrown group organization. It has taken work, and Mr. Dinwiddie says it has kept him from golf and from automobiling, although he is not a professional paid secretary. He has discovered a method of operating his big association by a frictionless process and other secretaries will do well to study carefully the full report made by this dean of the secretaries' association at the Waterloo convention.

On the morning of the first session at Waterloo, when everything looked rosy, Mr. Dinwiddie said in a burst of confidence: "I believe the convention is going to be a good one. I am going to show 1,350 or more members, and I do not believe there will be a dozen delinquents as to the payment of dues, in the whole bunch. Generally, matters have been running along nicely with the association and while there might be more 'frills' put on it with a permanent (?) secretary, I believe the boys will applaud somewhat the condition the present secretary is able to show. I do not believe many of them realize how much of his base ball, golf, and auto time it takes to keep this thing going, nor how many nights and Sundays he and his help puts in on this kind of work, but you know that when a thing is going the right direction, you like to push it. It is always easier to push a successful thing than it is to pull up hill one that is inclined to go down hill, but in whatever condition it is, if a man wants to make it a go, he has to exert some energy. I am only hoping the energy exerted will move the thing in the right direction."

Some of the sacrilegious youngsters were inclined to poke a little fun at the veteran secretary about his "two-two" bank statement. The Cedar Rapids Savings Bank, over the destinies of which Mr. Dinwiddie presides, shows assets of $2,222,222.22 in the reply to the auditor's call for May 18th. The bank pays 4 per cent on deposits, having paid out $800,000 in interest alone. The bank is a money maker and is as "large" as its owners care to have it. This is by way of a side light upon the Iowa association and its matchless secretary.

A New Doctrine in Illinois

The good faith of the old methods of electing members of the council of the Illinois Bankers Association and of certain policies in keeping ex-presidents on the council for life, was attacked at the Chicago convention last year. It was charged that certain active ex-presidents of the association had built up an oligarchy by which they dictated every act of the association and for years were able to defeat the adoption of the group form of organization and had in reality, made the organization the mere puppet of the private bankers in opposing and preventing all improvement in the state banking laws. A resolution was offered by a member, and due notice, given looking to a change in the methods to the modern plan as followed in all surrounding states with great success. This plan was fully indorsed at the Aledo meeting of Group One, on Tuesday, and action was taken in line of the sense of the Phillips constitutional amendment, if it is to be adopted at the Decatur convention. If nothing else comes up this one issue alone will make the Decatur meeting memorable. The group men and independents are tired, they say, of having less than a handful of men continue to usurp the functions of more than a thousand able bankers in the association.

Safety Papers

Bankers generally are familiar only in a superficial way with the many advantages of safety paper for checks, drafts and credit papers which can be rendered scientifically unchangeable. Fully 75 per cent of the larger banks in all of the central reserve cities use National Safety Paper and all of those in the West will be glad to learn that M. L. Haggerty for years with the New York office of George LaMonte & Son is now in charge of the Chicago branch, and will be glad to explain the merits of the safety paper to bankers who are interested, if they will kindly let him know, and will be glad to make a personal call, if requested to do so by the banker. Samples of the safety paper will be furnished by all stationers on request, or direct from the Chicago office. Before safety paper was used by the United States government, money orders were fraudulently raised and negotiated to the extent of $200,000 a year. Now nearly every railroad prints its tickets upon safety paper, bond houses use it for coupons and banks for checks, drafts and contract blanks of all kinds.

To George LaMonte, an American of Scotch descent, belongs the credit of the safety paper principle. To him also is justly due credit for devising special machinery and for the discovery of a process by which safety paper is treated during the course of manufacture.

The basic features of this safety paper are a special secret treatment, a peculiarity in surface designs and also certain characteristic differences in texture and "feel." The first, for the purpose of preventing acid or mechanical erasure, is based upon the principle that if a piece of paper is treated during the process of manufacture with a combination of chemicals the basis of which is identical with that of the commercial writing ink, the result, when an erasure is made, of combining the two, will be a perfect union. The second feature, in combination with fugitive tints, prevents photographic reproduction as well as the possibility of undetected erasure, while the third is mainly useful in protecting the consumer against impositions, once he becomes familiar with the special qualities of safety paper employed for specific purposes.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., June 16.—J. H. Mahundro, state bank examiner of Washington, announced in Spokane after visiting the Palouse State Bank at Palouse, Wash., for which J. K. McCormack, president of the Security State Bank of Palouse was appointed receiver on application of the Old National Bank of Spokane, that the forcing of a receiver was premature and might have been avoided had his office been called upon. The liabilities are placed at $170,000 with assets of $140,000. Ninety thousand dollars of this is in notes and some are said to be worthless. M. J. Hawkins, vice-president and manager, who bought the controlling interest from H. M. Boone, deputy state bank inspector, three months ago, says the 500 creditors may receive 50 cents on the dollar. Mr. Boone places his loss at $40,000, half of which he signed in notes to the old National Bank. Mr. McCormack says the affairs are in bad condition. The securities extend from Minneapolis to Seattle and cover almost every kind to be had, including mining stock, first and second mortgages and equity in real estate. The bank had a holding company for its real estate interests and the affairs of this and other corporations are so ramified that the true condition may not be known for weeks. Mr. Mahundro has suspended Mr. Boone as deputy examiner pending an investigation. In this he is acting under instructions from Governor Hay. No charges have been made against the bank officials. The creditors have asked for the appointment of Charles Henry, superintendent of schools, as the permanent receiver. Mr. Hawkins came to Washington from North Dakota, where he was a banker.

Spokane to Entertain A. B. A. Representatives

Bankers in Spokane will have as their guests on June 23d a party of financiers of New York and other eastern cities, coming to the Northwest under the auspices of the American Bankers Association to attend the annual convention of the state bankers associations of Washington, Idaho, and Oregon, at Seattle the last week in June. Charles Treat, treasurer of the United States, and Frank Vanderlip, president of the First National Bank of New York, will be in the party. The party will remain in Spokane at least 12 hours, during which there will be sight-seeing trips, a reception and a banquet in the Hall of the Doges, at which Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank will preside. This excursion will give many of the bankers in the East their first opportunity to look over the Northwest. The present low rate on money is gradually moving westward and there is reason to believe that vast sums will be poured into this territory as the result of the forthcoming visit.

Take Over Guaranty Company

R. Lewis Rutter, secretary and manager of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, and his associates including W. S. McCrea, Walter G. Merryweather, Arthur D. Jones, W. H. Winfree, H. J. Weeks and C. G. Reeder have taken over the Title Guarantee Company of Spokane, recently organized by Captain Robert H. Koontz, formerly clerk of Spokane county. The new company has subscribed for the entire stock issue of $50,000, and now has 25 men at work at the courthouse copying the records to make a complete set of abstract books.

To Organize Accountants' Association

Ellis McMaster, J. J. White, W. J. McKean, F. P. Greene and Robert Porter of Spokane, are planning to organize the Inland Empire Accountants' Association, with headquarters in this city. The membership will be confined to expert accountants, and those engaged in public work.

man of the board of control of the National Irrigation Congress and manager of the Hypotheekbank of Spokane, that that organization will be represented by a delegation at the 17th sessions of the National Irrigation Congress in Spokane, August 9th to 14th.

New Building for Fidelity Trust

$200,000,000 in Bonds

Two hundred million dollars is the extent of the mortgage given to the United Trust Company of New York, and Edward W. Sheldon as trustee by the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Company, just filed at Wallace, Idaho. It covers the company's coast extension from Pontis, S. D., to the Pacific coast. The bonds are dated January 1, 1909, and are payable in 50 years.

Report Good Crop

Bankers returning from the Horse Heaven country, southwest of Spokane report that the wheat crop there is estimated at 35 bushels an acre. There are about 100,000 acres in wheat, which means a crop of 3,500,000 bushels.

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the Associated Chapters A. I. of B. in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Independent Action and Universal Membership

Cleveland Chapter Annual Meeting

At the annual meeting of the Cleveland Chapter of the American Institute of Banking, held Tuesday evening, May 25th, at the Chamber of Commerce, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, W. R. Green, Guardian Savings & Trust Co.; vice-president, Horatio Ford, Garfield Savings Bank Co.; secretary, L. J. Kaufman, Guardian Savings & Trust Co.; treasurer, F. L. Frey, First National Bank. Board of governors; H. D. Cozad, Garfield Savings Bank Co.; W. F. Finley, Garfield Savings Bank Co.; W. C. Saunders, Union National Bank; P. J. Slach, Broadway Savings & Trust Co.

The policy of the Cleveland Chapter has been to elect no member to office until he has shown a willingness to work and ability to produce results, consequently the appearance of several new names on the official roster is very gratifying. The older members are very willing to share the labors of chapter work with any member who will really work. This fact was well brought out in an informal discussion of our policy for the coming year, led by Isadore Freiburger and Clay Herrick, both of the Cleveland Trust Co. It was agreed by all speakers that the purpose of the chapter should be educational with sufficient entertainment features to keep up the interest alike of the newest recruit and the oldest veteran in the banking profession. A smoker and luncheon closed an enjoyable meeting and a very successful year.

New Orleans Chapter

The New Orleans Chapter held its annual dinner Saturday evening, May 29th, with an attendance of nearly a hundred of the most active and progressive of the younger bankers in the city. The toastmaster was Philip Werlein, and among the guests were A. Breton, vice-president of the Louisiana Bankers Association, and E. F. Buhler, president of the Teutonia Bank. Informal talks and singing helped to make the banquet a success.

At a meeting held previous to the dinner the following officers of the chapter were elected: R. J. Palfrey, New Orleans National, president; C. F. Sullivan, Canal-Louisiana Bank and Trust Company, treasurer; F. L. Ramos, German-American National, secretary.

Election of Salt Lake Chapter's Officers

At the regular annual meeting of Salt Lake Chapter, held last week, officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, O. B. Kelly, Utah National Bank; vice-president, William McEwan, Zion's Savings Bank and Trust Co.; secretary, T. W. Ball, McCormick & Co.; treasurer, R. R. Sharkey, Continental National Bank. Joseph Buzzo, of Walker Bros., was elected to succeed E. L. Parker as a member of the executive committee.

Washington, Pa., Chapter Closes its Lecture Series

With an interesting lecture on "Credit and Fiat Money," by Prof. Joseph A. Beck, of Pittsburgh University, Washington Chapter brought a series of four lectures delivered during the winter, on banking subjects, to an appropriate close.

A buffet lunch was served to the members and their guests by the Y. W. C. A., and it was unanimously decided to arrange for another series of lectures next winter.

Billy's Banking

BY H. C. HURST.

William Gustave Biltondollar,
Swellest tie and highest collar,
Fell in love with Kitty Dalton, who was soubrette in a show;
Every evening he would meet her;
He grew sweet on her and sweeter,
Till he thought that life without her would be but a rotten go.

But about this time his daddy
Thought that little Willie laddie
Was too free with the spondulics that he had not sweat to earn;
So he told the girl he'd thank her
To skiddoo, so that a banker
He could make of his son William ere he was too old to learn.

So with men of various ages,
Back behind the gilded cages
Of the biggest bank in Biggsburg William Gustave settled down;
"Hay ban all time one nice feller,"
So he soon was made a teller,
And his window was the rendezvous of all the girls in town.

Bill's job had a silver lining,
But his heart was always pining
For the little dark-eyed actress whom he never could forget;
So there flew a secret letter,
Quickly once again he met her,
And the things they framed up that time haven't seen their finish yet.

One fine day the bank missed Willie,
And it knocked the cashier silly
To discover also missing half a cord of wrapped up "Cur.;"
Every blooming yellow journal
Had big headlines most infernal,— Willie's line of absent treatment seemed to kick up quite a stir.

In a flashy tropic city,
William and his little Kitty Went the pace in regal splendor till the "long green" all was blown;
Then she left him for another,
And a dear detective brother
Armed with requisition papers took Bill back whence he had flown.

In a jail he now doth languish,
Filled with prison fare and anguish,
Teaching all a useful lesson while he serves his sentence long;
Oil and water will not mix, sir,
Lest you get in the same fix, sir,
Just as long as you are banking cut out
"women, wine and song."

Officers Elected by San Francisco Chapter

At the recent annual election, San Francisco (Cal.) Chapter elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, George

L. Woolrich, Wells-Fargo-Nevada National Bank; Vice-President, William A. Day, Mechanics Savings Bank; Secretary, R. C. Gingg, San Francisco National Bank; Treasurer, W. B. Compton, Crocker National Bank. Governors, A. B. Cathcart, M. R. Clark, Grant Cordrey, W. F. Hallahan, J. C. L. Lipman, Russell Lowry, A. D. Oliver, R. F. Schlingheyde, Thomas G. Spillane, E. L. West. Delegates to the national convention at Seattle. Harry L. Clapp, William C. Conner, W. R. Berry, A. F. Fingoli, R. C. Gingg, F. D. Hansen, H. G. Hanley, William A. Marcus, J. M. Masten, E. F. Moffatt, F. C. Mortimer, A. D. Oliver, George L. Woolrick, C. H. Holt, Russell Lowry, W. B. Compton, W. F. Hallahan, Grant Cordrey, Frank L. Moss and I. H. Sanborn.

The chapter enjoyed a rare treat listening to a lecture on the prevention and punishment of crime against banks. It was delivered by Frederick H. Colburn, representing the protective committee of the California Bankers Association. He acts as prosecuting witness for any member of the association who has been defrauded, victimized, or upon whom an attempt to defraud has been made, by any crook, professional or amateur. He has acquired an extensive experience with criminals of that class and its recital proved unusually interesting to the bankers and their clerks who composed the audience.

He demonstrated that the fact of the association adhering to its motto "No compromise with criminals," and prompt and vigorous prosecution have been instrumental in perceptibly reducing crime against banks in California. The criminal has learned to fear the consequences of his crime, or attempts to defraud, while the police of every city and town approve the work of the association in that direction, and heartily co-operate with it. Forgers, safecrackers, check raisers and other crooks who operate against banks find that California is not congenial, and as a result such crimes have been reduced to a minimum in this state.

The chapter will have the lecture printed in pamphlet form and distributed among its members and all bankers of California.

Washington, D. C., Chapter Installs Officers

The Functions of the Bond Department

George B. Caldwell, bond expert for the American Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago, and manager of its bond department has this to say of the duties of the position.

The bond department of a trust company is one of the newer departments. The bond officer is, to the extent of the purchase of bonds by the company, or accepting the same as collateral to loans, one of its chief credit men. His duty is to secure for his company complete and accurate information upon the status, legality and security of all bonds, either corporate or municipal, that the company have offered. He is in constant touch with such securities, makes careful investigation through expert appraisers, engineers and legal talent, and recommends to his executive committee or board of directors such bonds as he believes are safe; following their approval the securities are purchased frequently in large amounts thus securing to the trust company the most advantageous price. When purchased, these securities are held as a part of the company's assets. There is a large and growing demand for securities of an institution which is known neither to buy or sell a bond which it cannot recommend.

When investors learn how much care is exercised in preliminary investigations by experts and attorneys before a bond officer recommends a security to his own company, little remains for him to do but review such reports, decide what he prefers to buy, clip the coupons and collect the interest thereafter. In the case of a mortgage investor and a great many other forms of investment a great many things must be watched constantly to avoid the impairment of the security. Especially are bonds preferable to real estate in the matter of convertibility.

It may be true that some individual class or vocation has suffered by the development of the trust company, but we must also conclude that it has and will grow in its usefulness to the public. As our country grows older it grows richer—it also amends old laws and passes new ones, and who better than the trust company will keep up with the times? Competition, if nothing else, insures this, while the composite and varied character of our business and our people will produce a volume of business which insures a greater success than yet attained by every trust company conscientiously, honestly and prudently managed.

North Dakota Convention

The North Dakota Bankers Association annual convention will be held at Minot, July 8th and 9th. Following is a list of addresses to be made, with post-office addresses of the speakers:

"Postal Savings Bank Legislation," Hon. A. D. Stephens, Crookston, Minn.; "Taxation of Intangible Property," Dr. Frank L. McVey, President University of North Dakota; "The Interstate Protective Association," Mr. Charles R. Frost, Secretary Minnesota Bankers Association; "The Business Outlook," James J. Earley, of Valley City; "Banking Law and Legislation," Hon. Edward Engerud, of Fargo; "Bank Examinations," J. H. Terrett, of Michigan City; "Bank Publicity," H. A. Blodgett, Cooley-Blodgett Company, Minneapolis.

Warrants for Bank Men

Lewiston, Id., June 7.—Warrants have been issued by a United States commissioner, charging Clarence Robnett, ex-bookkeeper, and J. L. Chapman, ex-assistant cashier of the Lewiston National Bank, with embezzling. Robnett is charged with having embezzled $91,375 from the bank and Chapman with having embezzled $45,625, the total, $137,000, being the amount of the shortage said to have been discovered recently. Chapman was placed under arrest and released on a $5,000 bond. Robnett, it is said, will arrive here tomorrow from the East. The preliminary hearing of both men has been set for June 21st.

The Security State Bank Starbuck, Minn., has been incorporated. Capitalized at $10,000.

Cities to be Visited by Japanese

Fifty prominent manufacturing and commercial centers in the United States will be visited by 50 representative Japanese bankers, importers, educators, legislators and trade experts and their wives and secretaries, during September, October and November, making the ocean to ocean tour in special trains as guests of the chambers of commerce of Seattle, Portland, Tacoma and Spokane. The party will be accompanied by 15 representatives of the four commercial organizations and 15 government experts, leaving Spokane the middle of September, after visiting Seattle, Portland and Tacoma. These cities are included in the itinerary:

Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Worcester, Brockton, Lowell, Lynn, Cambridge, Fall River, Providence, Schenectady, Ithaca, Buffalo, Syracuse, Rochester, Niagara Falls, Pittsburgh, Bethlehem, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Madison, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Superior, Duluth and the iron ore ranges, St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City, Fargo, Denver and Salt Lake City. Several cities in the South, including New Orleans, and points in California, the Dakotas, Montana and other western states will also be visited, if the present plans are adopted by the arrangement committee.

Frederick E. Goodall, president of the Spokane chamber of commerce, who has just returned from an extended trip to make arrangements for the reception and entertainment of the Japanese party in the east, announces that the government, railroads, banks and commercial organizations are co-operating with the western chambers of commerce to make the tour a benefit to the entire country. He added that the purpose of the trip is to acquaint the visitors with the natural resources and trade possibilities of the United States and to strengthen the relations with Japan.

"E. F. Blaine and J. D. Lowman of Seattle and myself visited the principal cities in 25 states during our recent trip, which occupied six weeks," said Mr. Goodall, "and everywhere the keenest interest was manifested in the coming excursion. President Taft also evidenced his interest in the movement, which is designed to bring the Japanese and American into closer touch with each other in trade and other ways, and he immediately suggested that the department of the

"It has been decided that much of the time in the various cities will be given to the inspection of the industrial establishments, such as the manufacture of textiles, machinery, locomotives and electrical appliances, boots and shoes; and, in fact, every industry that would be benefited by having a wider market for its products. We shall also visit the educational institutions at Cambridge, Mass., Ithaca, N. Y., and possibly New Haven, Conn., and several others. Boston will be made the pivotal point for visiting the manufacturing centers in the New England states, while New York will afford us opportunity to make trips to the cities in New York state. Chicago has been designated another center, from which we shall probably visit Gary, the wonder city in northern Indiana, and other places.

"In the event it is decided to make a tour through California, a matter which now rests wholly with the commercial organizations in the Golden Gate state, it is likely that a number of the larger cities in the South will be visited, to give the party an idea of the great industry in cotton goods and other manufactures. The vast iron ore ranges out of Duluth will also be visited by special trains and other mining districts may be included. We shall also visit the leading financial and commercial institutions of the country, and we have every reason to believe that much good will result from the tour as well as the visit of the representative business and professional men who will be in the Japanese party."

Bert Smith, cashier of the Bank of Paul, (Neb.) has resigned. John Celke will take his place.

Worried about National Banks

Boonville, Ark., May 29.—Editor of THE CHICAGO BANKER—I get all mixed up on politics, religion, and finance. Only recently a rumor came out of the United States attorney-general's office to the effect that national banks could not guarantee the deposits of other banks—that their charters did not permit it—and yet I read in the Chicago papers that the national banks of Chicago did guarantee the deposits of the Walsh bank and lost several millions in the deal. I just can't keep anything straight in my head any more, and I am so flustered for fear Mr. MacVeagh will take away the charters of the banks guilty of this terrible offense. I surely hope he will overlook this trifling violation of the law. A. D. ROBERTS.

Spain Adopts the Postal Banks

Madrid, June 7.—The cortes to-day passed the bill providing for the reorganization of the Spanish postal and telegraph services. The measure will result in the cheapening of postal rates and the introduction of a parcels post, a money-order system and a postal savings bank. Another measure passed renews steamship subsidies to the amount of $2,000,000 a year.

A new bank has been organized at Stady, N. D. J. E. Landro is one of the prime movers.

Deposit Guaranty

New York, June 7.—Officials of the surety companies are wrestling with the problem of how best to give protection to national banks in Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska, where they compete with state banks operating under a guaranteed deposit law. They have had many alternative plans presented for their consideration. Action is to be taken at a general meeting of representatives of seventeen companies, with a total capitalization of about $35,000,000, to be held here in about ten days. Chief among the alternative plans now under consideration are these:

1. That the surety companies issue a general guaranty payable immediately after the closing of a bank, the guaranty to cover the entire amount on deposit.
2. Guaranty to pay 25 per cent within five days, 25 per cent in thirty days, 25 per cent in sixty days and the balance within ninety days or that the several periods be made longer.
3. Guaranty that the depositor shall get his entire sum within one year after the bank has closed.
4. Guaranty that the banker shall get ultimately 100 cents on the dollar.
5. That the surety company shall guarantee to depositors an amount equal to the total capital and surplus of the bank, thus in reality doubling the bank's capital by the lending of the surety company's credit.

The Des Moines Trust and Savings is the name of the new savings bank to be started by the Des Moines National when the latter occupies its handsome new building next week. The capital stock will be $60,000. The officers will be the same as those of the Des Moines National.

National Bankers to Guarantee Deposits

Topeka, Kan., June 8.—The national bankers of Kansas will meet here next Monday and organize the Bankers' Deposit Guaranty and Surety Corporation. The call has been issued by Elmer E. Ames, cashier of the Central National of this city. He says 240 national banks have joined the association.

At the forthcoming meeting the bankers will elect a board of directors, who will be the principal ruling body of the corporation. These directors will elect officers and the officers will establish headquarters in Topeka and operate their deposit insurance business from here. The company will issue to banks passing a satisfactory examination policies of insurance guaranteeing that in case of failure all depositors will be paid in full and at once. The corporation also will extend aid to banks in distress, and thus prevent failures. The corporation is capitalized at $500,000.

The corporation thus being organized is formed to enable bankers not admitted under the new state guaranty law to insure their deposits against loss and also to induce as many state banks as possible to adopt its plan of deposit guaranty in preference to that provided by the state. It is one of the three schemes for deposit guaranty now being put into effect. One of the other plans is that provided by state guaranty, and the third is that of the eastern surety and bonding companies.

Insurance men generally are much interested in the turn bank deposit guaranty is taking, since it is becoming a new form of insurance as distinct as fire or life insurance. The general opinion here is that the passage of the state guaranty law in Oklahoma, Kansas and other western states will force the subject of deposit guaranty upon bankers throughout the country and compel them to take action to guarantee deposits against loss as a matter of selfprotection. This condition, it is contended by Kansas bankers, will be forced by the big surety and bonding companies of the East.

At the annual meeting of the executive council of the Michigan Bankers Association, held in Detroit, the announcement was made that the following prominent financiers have been selected to address the convention at Petoskey, July 7, 8 and 9: Clark Williams, commissioner of banking of New York state; Lucius Teter of Chicago, Frederick Kent, of the Bankers Trust Co. of New York, and E. D. Durham of Onarga, Ill.

During the past year the association has gained 50 new members, under the administration of Hal H. Smith, secretary and attorney for the association.

The executive committee felt a great deal of satisfaction in the fact that all of the legislation proposed by the association passed the present session of the legislature, with the exception of the private bankers' bill, and some legislation along that line will be introduced in the legislature two years hence.

Our Friends of the Press

Nearly all of the financial newspapers and magazines are now devoting space and brains to the affairs of the American Institute of Banking. Every institute member should cooperate in such work in every possible way. Do not think that any piece of news or any opinion worth publication should be held back for the Bulletin. Give everything to everybody. Make special effort to herald the educational work of the Institute. Social events are not of so much importance. Find out exactly what the financial newspapers and magazines want, and give it to them in the exact manner in which they want it. Be brief and forceful, and do not mind if the editors cut your copy. They cannot all be as easy as the editor of the Bulletin. They reach a constituency, however, which the Bulletin does not reach, and everything they publish, even criticisms, is publicity for the institute. The financial press is of incalculable benefit to the banking interests of America and should be backed to the limit morally and materially.

NOW Is the Time to Buy a Six-Cylinder Car

Especially if the car you own is a Four. Every day that you postpone selling your old car lessens its sale value. Not only because a car is worth less the older it gets, but because Six popularity makes the Four market bearish.

Even now you will find depreciation in selling your Four, but that can't be avoided. Your best move is to sell now for what you can realize, and avoid the worse loss you would suffer by holding on.

You will have the security that, once you do own a high-class Six, you will not again be the victim of rapid depreciation, due to quick changes in types.

Authorities are agreed that the Six represents the highest development of the gasoline motor and that the Six will remain standard for many years.

But be sure the Six you buy is a Six of class—a proved car, right in design, in weight, in performance. Don't experiment; it isn't necessary. Winton Sixes are proved cars. 4343 miles on $1 upkeep is part of the evidence—evidence of inexpensive maintenance, durability, safety. Other evidence is shown in what the car does—quietness, flexibility, hill-climbing capacity, speed, comfort. The Winton Six Goes the Route Like Coasting Down Hill.

South Dakota's New Banking Law

South Dakota's new banking law, which becomes effective on July 1st next, provides for the establishment of a state banking department, which shall be under the management of the public examiner. This department will "have charge of the execution of the laws relating to banks, trust companies, and the banking business in the state."

The law provides: "The public examiner shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and shall hold office for the term of four years, and until his successor shall have been appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the governor for good cause. The public examiner may appoint a deputy, with the consent and approval of the governor, and they may revoke such appointment at pleasure; provided, that no person shall be eligible for the office of public examiner, or deputy, without first having had at least three years' actual practical experience in the general banking business, or served for a like period in the banking department of this or some other state."

"Such deputy shall possess all the powers and perform the duties attached to the office of the public examiner during a vacancy in such office and during the absence or inability of his principal. The public examiner may also employ from time to time, with the consent and approval of the governor, such examiners and clerks to assist him and his deputy in the discharge of the several duties imposed upon him by this act as he shall find necessary. The salary of the public examiner shall be $2,000 per annum. The salary of the deputy shall be $1,500 per annum. The salary of such examiners shall be not to exceed $1,500 per annum, to be fixed by the public examiner, and the salary of such clerks as may be employed shall be at such a rate per annum as the public examiner shall decide, not, however, to exceed $1,200 for one and $1,000 for any other."

"Provided, that no public examiner, his deputy, nor any of his examiners, shall be a stockholder, or in any manner financially interested, in any bank."

The public examiner will be required to examine all banks, except national, and all trust companies at least twice a year.

Any number of natural persons, not less than three, who are residents of South Dakota, may associate to establish a bank under this chapter, upon the terms and conditions, and subject to the liabilities prescribed in this act.

The aggregate amount of the capital stock of any bank shall be not less than $10,000 in towns containing 1,500 inhabitants or less, and in towns of over 1,500 and not more than 2,500 inhabitants the capital shall not be less than $15,000, and in towns of over 2,500 inhabitants and not more than 5,000 inhabitants the capital shall be not less than $25,000, and in towns of over 5,000 inhabitants the capital shall be not less than $50,000, all of which shall be paid in full in lawful money of the United States. This section shall not apply to any incorporated state bank now in existence.

Provided, that all banks heretofore organized with a capital of less than $10,000 shall increase their capital to not less than $10,000, and in accordance with the foregoing requirements of capital and population whenever their deposits average ten times their capital stock and surplus, for a period of six months; and Provided further, that no bank shall receive deposits in excess of fifteen times its capital and surplus, the same to be determined by the average of its deposits for six months.

Any national bank authorized to dissolve, and which shall have taken the necessary steps to effect dissolution, may reorganize under this act, upon the consent in writing of the owners of two-thirds of the capital stock of such bank, and with the approval of the public examiner. Such stockholders shall make, execute and acknowledge articles of organization as required by this act, and shall set forth the said written consent of such stockholders. Upon the filing of said articles, as provided by this act, and upon the approval of the public examiner, such bank shall be deemed to be reorganized under this act, and thereupon all assets, real and personal, of such dissolved national bank, shall be vested in and become the property of such reorganized bank, subject to all liabilities of such national bank not liquidated before such reorganization.

Every bank shall keep on hand at all times at least 20 per cent of its total deposits, of which such portion as the board of directors may determine may be on deposit in banks approved by the public examiner as reserve banks, which banks shall at all times keep on hand at least 25 per cent of their total deposits in lawful money, or on deposit in banks subject to the approval of the said public examiner, as reserve banks. Cash items shall not be considered as a part of the reserve of any bank.

Whenever the reserve of any bank shall fall below the amount herein required to be kept, such bank shall not increase its loans or discounts otherwise than by discounting or purchasing bills of exchange payable at sight or on demand, and the public examiner shall notify any bank whose reserve may be below the amount required herein, to make good such reserve, and in case the bank fails for sixty days thereafter to make good such reserve, the public examiner is hereby authorized to take charge of and to wind up the affairs of such bank.

No individual, firm, or corporation transacting a banking business in this state shall loan to any single corporation, firm, or individual, including in such loans all loans made to the several members of such firm or co-partnership, more than 25 per cent of the paid-up capital and surplus of such bank. And in no case shall the total liabilities of the several stockholders of an incorporated bank, including any and all liabilities of any firm or corporation in which such stockholders may be interested, to such a bank, exceed 50 per cent of the paid-up capital of said bank. But the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values, and the discount of commercial paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same shall not be considered as money borrowed.

No partnership, firm, or individual transacting a banking business in this state shall be permitted to carry any note or obligation of any such partnership, or firm, or individual, or any of the members of such partnership, or firm as any part of the assets of the bank. And no active officer or employee of any corporation transacting a banking business in this state shall be permitted to borrow any of the funds of the bank upon his own note or obligation without having first obtained the approval of a majority of the board of directors of the bank, and the approval, if obtained, shall be properly recorded in the bank's minute

Group Three, Wisconsin

Appleton, Wis.—At the annual meeting of Group Three of the Wisconsin Bankers Association last week the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, George H. Utz, Menasha; vice-president, H. C. Hanson, Sheboygan; secretary and treasurer, H. J. Maxwell, Princeton.

Executive committeemen, T. C. Eberne, Fond du Lac, and F. W. Humphrey, Shawano.

George E. Roberts of Chicago was the principal speaker at the afternoon session. Roberts flayed the postal savings bank plan as provided for in the Carter bill, arguing that under such a system the rate of interest would shrink materially because the stringent regulations of the United States government concerning the investment of money intrusted to its care would prohibit such investments as real estate mortgages, which are particularly profitable.

Burglary in Illinois

The first burglary policy issued to a member of the Illinois Association through Secretary Rinaman was taken by McClure & Jacobs, of Arrowsmith, in December, 1908; on Saturday morning, the 24th ult., yeggman blew their safe taking $2,100 in cash and two checks. This loss has been adjusted and Secretary Rinaman expects to get draft in full settlement in their hands before the end of the week. This statement is only made as an evidence of the fact that Illinois Bankers Association insurance is "the kind that insures." The association is offering a reward of $350 for the apprehension and conviction of the guilty parties in this case, as well as in another where the Woodlawn Bank was robbed on the 14th ult.

So far 69 members have placed their burglary insurance through the association, not half what should have been written considering the number that have matured on which rates were quoted.

Chicago's Credit the Best

Fifteen Chicago bankers dined at the Midday Club with the city comptroller, and agreed to take all tax warrants at 3 per cent. When "sold" privately in former years the buyers "obtained" as much as ten per cent. Publicity regulates credits and gives credit where credit is due.

The Hornaday Creditors Protest

Fort Scott, Kas., June 1.—The guaranty of state bank deposits is acting as a stimulus to stir up the depositors' league in its attempt to keep track of Receiver Watts of the failed First National, the "Hornaday bank." Some time ago the comptroller of the currency granted the depositors the right to have an examination of the bank assets. Receiver John Watts set the date of such examination eight days from the receipt of the order from Comptroller Murray. A couple of nights before the examination was to have been held Watts left town and has been in Oklahoma for nearly three weeks. The depositors complain that he refuses to tell them when he is going on these trips, and much dissatisfaction has been the result.

One on the Adding Machine

Lewiston, Idaho, June 2.—National Bank Examiner Claude Gatch is authority for the statement that a shortage has been discovered in the funds of the Lewiston National. Beyond the fact that the stockholders have made the shortage good, Mr. Gatch declines to discuss the situation. It is said that the defalcation amounts to $137,000. The embezzlement has extended five years and it was made possible by manipulation of the adding machine used in computing the daily balances.

May Insure Deposits

Washington, D. C., May 31.—"It is a matter for the discretion of the directors and officers of a national bank to determine whether they will enter into a contract with an insurance company guaranteeing the bank's solvency," says Attorney-General Wickersham in an opinion forwarded to-day to Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh.

This discretion, says the attorney-general, is "to be exercised in view of the solvency and general financial conditions of the company making the insurance and the reasonableness of the rate of premium." Mr. Wickersham says that after the form of the policy is modified to conform to the suggestion he makes, in his opinion he sees no legal reason why a bank may not enter into such contract.

A Fisk & Robinson Offering

Fisk & Robinson are offering a limited amount of Swift estate 5½ per cent two year notes, to be dated June 1, 1909, at 101 and interest, at which price the notes yielded approximately 5 per cent. The total issue amounts to $4,500,000, and is secured by a deposit with the United States Mortgage and Trust Company of New York of 1,020 shares capital stock of the Union Stockyards Company of Omaha, limited; 4,000 shares St. Joseph Stockyards Company, 8,011 shares St. Louis National Stockyards, 16,500 shares Swift & Co., and 75,050 shares National Packing Company.

Merrill, Wis., Bank Robbery

Merrill, Wis., May 28.—A bold robbery took place in broad daylight to-day when four highwaymen raided the German American State Bank. Three of them covered the cashier, R. C. Ballstadt; the fourth went through the vaults and secured upward of $1,000, overlooking $20,000 in another vault. They then escaped but were pursued by a posse of several hundred. Two were later captured in a swamp after a hot exchange of shots.

Des Moines, June 9.—An interesting discussion is on amongst bankers of the state, particularly in eastern Iowa over a proposition to reduce the interest rate paid on time deposits, made at the recent meeting of Group Eight at Clinton. The recommendation was that the interest rate be reduced from four per cent to three and a half and it caused quite a little debate. Later the Davenport banks announced that they would not make the cut, which means that the bankers will have something to argue about when the group meets again besides guaranteed bank deposits and postal savings banks. The banker who suggested the cut at the Clinton meeting said he thought that the interest rate should be cut from 4 to 3½ per cent at once and that after a few months have elapsed the rate should be cut to 3 per cent. In eastern Iowa there are more banks than in other sections of the state, competition is stronger and hence the topic is of more direct interest to these financiers than to bankers who reside in other portions of Iowa.

Des Moines Bankers Attend State Convention

Many New Banks Organized

If new banks are a sign of prosperity, then Iowa is prosperous as never before. Within the past ten days more new banks have been formed in the state than in any similar time in years, bankers say. The new banks thus formed are as follows:

First National of Fayette, capital $25,000. A. Hansen, M. J. Hartman, W. B. Stevenson, A. M. Odell, W. N. Clothier, directors.

Lost Suit

A. N. Bort, head banker for the Modern Woodmen of America lost out at Sioux City, in his suit to compel twenty farmers who were bondsmen for the late E. H. McCutchen, banker at Holstein, to make good the $100,000 of Woodmen funds deposited in the Holstein bank by Mr. Bort. While strictly speaking Bort is responsible for the funds, the showing that he made in court relieves him of any liability and the Modern Woodmen will be asked to make up the amount by assessment, it is supposed. The defense of the bondsmen was that McCutchen deceived them, that he told them he had thirty-five bondsmen when he secured but twenty-one. The case attracted widespread attention for McCutchen was one of the leading financiers in Iowa, it was supposed until his death revealed the true condition of the Holstein bank.

Celebrates Golden Wedding

One of the leading social events of the season in Des Moines was the celebration of the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Marquardt. Mr. Marquardt, was the founder of the Marquardt Savings of this city which on July 1st becomes the Commercial Savings. Mr. and Mrs. Marquardt were married at Iowa City and Mr. Marquardt conducted a jewelry business there until his removal to Des Moines. He organized the Marquardt Savings in 1891. Five children and ten grandchildren were on hand at the golden wedding anniversary at the Marquardt residence, 2120 Grand Avenue.

Property Increases in Valuation

A remarkable increase in valuation of Des Moines property is shown by the yearly report of City Assessor James Parker, completed last week. The total property valuation is shown to be more than $100,000,000. The gain in real and personal property in the year was $5,633,704.

Iowa Bank President Sued

President E. E. Hart of the First National at Council Bluffs has been made defendant in suits totaling many thousands of dollars by victims of the Maybray swindling gang who transacted their business through Mr. Hart's bank, so the plaintiffs assert. Sometime ago, the bank was made defendant in a similar action but Mr. Hart was not personally included. The Maybray gang operated with fake horse races, wrestling matches, etc., and mulcted strangers out of large amounts. Mr. Hart is reported ill.

The Great Investment!

Do you want timber lands?

Do you want to start a townsite?

Are you interested in agricultural or fruit lands?

If so, buy United States Government Land Certificates. They will purchase any timber or agricultural lands subject to entry in any State in the Union or Alaska. Title attaches at once. Residence on land unnecessary. You can start a townsite, select the finest timber lands, or locate the choicest farming land in any state from Florida to Alaska with this scrip. These certificates do not call for any certain tract of land but can be located on any lands subject to entry in the United States. You simply buy the land from the Government with this scrip. There is no time limit for locating same.

United States Government Land Certificates

These certificates come in 80 and 120-acre pieces and are approved by the Government. Each piece has a letter of approval attached to it from the Department of the Interior and they can be registered like a Government bond, so a duplicate can be issued by the Government in case original is destroyed by fire. Therefore they are as safe as a Government bond.

Approved by the Government

From an investment standpoint, where can you get anything that, by holding, greatly increases in value each year, where the Government of the United States is behind it, and where you have something that is as safe as a Government bond? Or, if you wish to use it at any time, you can take your choice of any Government agricultural lands in Florida, California, or any State or Territory of the United States, or where you can locate a townsite or select the finest timber lands that are open in the West or Northwest? Where could a man get a better investment for his money? Price, $25.00 per acre.

These certificates have advanced 100 per cent in value the past two years. Only a limited amount left in the United States.

ment of waterways has gone to Chicago and Ohio to gather statistical information regarding the tonnage originating in the territory tributary to the Ohio river. Mr. Miller thinks that this information will be useful to determine what the Des Moines river may expect when it is canalized. Government surveyors are now at work on the Iowa stream and have pronounced it capable of being made navigable. The question of whether the business it would do would justify the expense is the tickling question and it is upon this point that Mr. Miller expects to enlighten the government.

Rounding Up Bank Robbers

The gang which is thought to have robbed the Badger bank is being rounded up. C. W. Steele has been arrested at Denver and he is said to be the pal of Charles Lytel who was arrested at Sioux City and held to the grand jury at Fort Dodge. A man known as "Iowa Blackie" who was taken into custody at Sidney is believed to be of the Imogene bank robbers and one of the associates of Amel Walla who is now in the penitentiary as a leader in that bunch. Gradually it is dawning upon bank robbers that they are taking long chanees.

Two Much Talked-of Books

The books of the Bobbs-Merrill Co., of Indianapolis, have an undisputable vogue of their own, not irrespective of merit, but on trust since so few ill-chosen things have slipped by their reader, backed up by a tireless supervision by the principals. Two of the latest and best are "Infatuation" and the "Elusive Isabel." The titles are fascinating, the covers the acme of perfection and the tales—they must be read.

"Infatuation" is by Lloyd Osburne, and is a startling and vivid story delightfully told of the strength and beauty of woman's love. It tells of a woman's infatuation for a man frankly, bravely, unconventionally, and of her love tenderly, touchingly, gloriously. It ends well, and the plot cannot be sketched without spoiling a treat. It prepares the reader for "Elusive Isabel" by Jacques Futrelle, who wrote the "Simple Case of Susan." "The Chase of the Golden Plate" and "The Thinking Machine." Now comes "Elusive Isabel," fully illustrated by Alonzo Kimball, a story of surpassing grace and charm, which stands far out in front of the rank and file. This is a story of intrigue, in a refined way, in Washington high life, giving cherished glances into the charmed administrative and diplomatic circles. It will be read with interest, and is quite a revelation in a way, in a new field.

Both books by the Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis, at $1.50 each.

"The Bridge Builders," by Anna Chapin Ray

The ancient city of Quebec is in the foreground and the whole of British Canada in the background of the plot for Anna Chapin Ray's new novel, "The Bridge Builders," published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston. The characters are grouped about the construction of the new bridge—now famous as the ill-fated.

Jessica West, newly rich child of Arizona mining camps, is the heroine, and sharply contrasted with her gay self-confidence and daring young beauty are Kay Dorrance, a rising American author, and Willis Asquith, deeply English, unobtrusively manly, who holds a position of unofficial responsibility in regard to the big bridge. Both these men love Jessica, and there is yet another, M. de la Haye, who begins operations by skillfully playing on the wounded jealousy of Mrs. West, sick at heart because of the joyous, unintentionally exclusive comradeship between her daughter and husband. Colonel West, whole-hearted and virile, unavoidably absent at the beginning of the play, returns in time to send M. de la Haye packing, but not in time to save his darling Jessica from certain severe heartaches. Dorrance and Asquith have heartaches—and other aches—too, but the end of the tale finds Jessica and one of her lovers happy, though which one must be left for the reader's personal discovery. The collapse of the bridge, bearing with it dear hopes and aims long cherished by Asquith, inflicting upon him severe bodily injury, is but one of the exciting episodes chronicled. And there is no moment when the story could be considered dull.

A New Mystery Story

The R. F. Fenno Company, New York, has out a new mystery story by Headon Hill, entitled "Unmasked at Last." Mr. Hill has written some of the best mystery stories in print and this one is quite up to the mark. The opening is with the murder of a pastor in his study with no clue but a strange agate button. Even Sherlock Holmes would have been puzzled, but the end is happy, as all endings of mystery stories should be. Price $1.50.

"Why We Love Lincoln"

One of the best little books ever published has just come from the press of the Outing Publishing Co., entitled "Why We Love Lincoln" by the great writer and war correspondent, James Creelman. Mr. Creelman has combined tribute and biography in the little book he has just published. He maintains, throughout his narrative, that a nation which can respond so quickly to the name of Lincoln must be, essentially, a good nation. He offers this fact to confuse those who are prone to believe that greed and money-getting have corrupted the land which Lincoln served. There is also a simple, sufficiently comprehensive statement of the facts in the great president's life, giving the work its additional biographical value. The style is highly eloquent—one almost hears the lines delivered from the pulpit or platform, so musical is their form. The volume contains several fine portraits and illustrations. Price $1.25, net.

A Story of Stage Life

The Harper Brothers, of New York, have given the public a really acceptable story of stage life. The author is Louise Houser Hale and the title is "The Actress." It tells of a headstrong, stage struck girl who deserts her lover for a stage career but later gives up the stage for her lover, whom she marries. The book is clever and ought to cure many like minded young women. A study of the book will reveal the sufferings of the would-be actress when her disillusion came followed by a nervous break-down. Then came the lover, at the critical moment, and all ends well.

"The Dawn of the Day"

"The Dawn of the Day" is breaking in the great field of bank protection against burglars. The American Bank Protection Company, Minneapolis, has a plan which is deposit guaranty simplified. "Not one dollar" has been lost by burglary by any bank using their protection devices. Best of all George D. Bartlette, he who manages the insurance department for the Wisconsin Bankers Association, is the manager for the American and that means a lot to practical bankers.

At Par and Accrued Interest

JUST think this over! The big committee on entertainment of the delegates to the A. B. A. convention in September will be overlooking something if they do not have a brokers' committee; a commercial paper committee, and a bond house committee. These gentlemen are of the "live wire" brand and are Chicago boosters to the last minute.

THE thousands who have admired the brilliant J. A. S. Pollard, and have laughed at his wit and funny pictures in THE CHICAGO BANKER will be pleased to know that he has a son—a chip off the old block. At times "Joe" doesn't look to be over the age which his boy claims, but that is another story.

THIS is what the home paper at Ft. Madison said when the High School class graduated this month. "The valedictorian, E. Harrington Pollard, took for his subject 'Immigration,' and handled the subject in a most able manner, going into the depth and breadth of the question. His voice was clear and every word distinct. It was, in reality, the best composition heard in many years at commencement."

S. B. CHAPIN has come to Chicago from New York for the summer so as to be near his home at Lake Geneva during the months of July and August. Mr. Chapin says: "In a financial way, Chicago continues to grow in the estimation of eastern banking interests. Always important, Chicago has grown to large proportions in the one matter of offering a market for the distribution of bonds and investment securities. Within the last few years the largest of the eastern bond houses have opened branches in Chicago. The New York banks take a continually wider view of Chicago's position and the banks here enjoy the highest credit with eastern institutions."

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL stock after hanging around $300 for months has gone up five points on the crossing of the fifty millions in deposits line, last week. A new era of growth is predicted.

F. D. COUNTISS was elected president of the Chicago Stock Exchange on Tuesday. He occupies an enviable position in the brokerage world as the western managing partner for S. B. Chapin, one of the strongest houses catering to the public.

GEORGE B. CALDWELL is a headliner on the Washington end of the tri-state convention at the Seattle fair June 24th, 25th, 26th. Mr. Caldwell has been so successful with the bond department of the American Trust Co., Chicago, that they take him on programs with or without a subject.

H. B. JUDSON, manager of the bond department of the Northern Trust is a brother of Frank P. Judson of the Bankers National. By the way the "list" is expanding one could but think the department, which is not very old yet, had made a hit.

SECRETARIES take notice. All of the speakers at the Iowa convention except President Brooks and Secretary Dinwiddie, were of the (carefully preferred) extemporaneous variety. We have this at first hand and (except the two words in parentheses) in writing.

J. P. MORGAN & CO. have retired from their connection with the formation of the United States Agricultural Corporation, under which it was proposed to combine about 50 fertilizer manufacturers into a single corporation with $50,000,000 capital. The thing is said to have had a "bad odor."

D. ARTHUR BOWMAN, Third National Bank Building, St. Louis, has prepared a special circular on "Well-Secured Taxed-Bonds" of the Central and far West which pay 6 per cent and mature in serial installments. Of late investors have shown a decided preference for such investments.

FREDERIC H. HATCH & CO., 30 Broad St., New York, have issued a special descriptive circular on the American Typefounders' Company's 6 per cent gold bonds.

WE learn from George R. Martin, of chapter fame, that James W. Maxwell, cashier of the Seattle National, has been made chairman of the "Banker's Day" committee of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition during the state convention. The Seattle people are promising a great time to the boys who come to the A. I. B. national convention.

GEORGE A. JACKSON, Continental National, Chicago, continues his labors as chairman of the transportation committee for the associated chapters, and his big Chicago-Seattle special, out over the Milwaukee road, will be the finest ever. He still is able to make choice reservations.

WE print the excellent character likeness of Capt. Perry Harrison of Minneapolis, on dress parade, photo by A. A. Crane, of the same city, in the new department or feature, for the sole purpose of attracting your attention. It really belongs in the "Mainly About Banks and Bankers" on page 3. Hereafter when you do not find what you are looking for in the one special department look in the other. We have it from Orde that Capt. Harrison has more medals than are shown in the cut, but hadn't room for them on his manly bosom.

E. P. SELDEN of Erie, Pa., has patented a postal card remittance check which is the cheapest, safest and quickest form of money transfer yet discovered. They are limited in amount to ten dollars and the back is blank for correspondence. Just write to Mr. Selden, Erie, Pa., for samples. He's a big enough man not to require a private or keyed address.

A RTHUR REYNOLDS has yielded to the many requests for copies of his Wichita address on "Some Aids to the Solution of our Financial Problem" and has printed it in neat booklet form. Bankers interested in the subject will do well to get copies, as Mr. Reynolds has been so long on the federal legislative committee of the A. B. A. that his views are just about standard.

Reynolds Favors a Central Bank of Issue

President George M. Reynolds, of the great American Bankers Association, went out to Iowa last week, among his old neighbors and friends, the state where he was born and learned the elements of safe and successful banking, and told them in confidence of his belief in a central bank of issue. He even gave tionary in its effect can be passed; and, indeed I have arrived at the conclusion that we can find a way out of the present situation without doing anything which need seriously disturb existing conditions, and with that thought in view I have in my own mind evolved a plan which I think would answer our needs, because its adoption would not interfere with a single function enjoyed by any bank in any section of the country, other than that the plan would contemplate the withdrawal of government funds entirely from the national banks of the country and depositing of the same with the central bank.

Inasmuch as I would have the government deposit all of its money in this bank, without interest, and would have the bank act as the fiscal agent for the government, I would give the government one-half of the profits made by such bank in excess of the dividends guaranteed by it.

I am convinced that under these conditions the stock would be very popular, as it in reality would be equivalent to a government bond.

In addition to the deposits of the government funds in this bank, I would have it act as the depository of the national banks in the three central reserve cities of New York, Chicago and St. Louis, and I would have the reserves now locked up by them carried in the central bank, the same as the joint-stock banks of London, Paris and Berlin carry their reserves with the Bank of England, the Bank of France and the Reichbank, respectively.

Under ordinary conditions this would give the central bank a deposit line of from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000.

For this I would accumulate gold, which I would have taken to the note issuing department and would have bank notes issued against the same, which bank notes, in turn, I would take back to the banking department and have carried as reserve against the deposits of the government and the central reserve city national banks, just as the Bank of England carries its bank notes against its banking deposits, keeping all of its gold in the issuing department as security for its outstanding bank notes.

In this way I would provide for an increase

JOSEPH CHAPMAN, Jr.
Minneapolis, Minn.

H. P. MCINTOSH
President Guardian Trust Company, Cleveland, Ohio

Briefly, my plan would be as follows:

I would organize a central bank with $100,000,000 capital, with its headquarters in New York, Chicago or Washington; I would have branches of this bank located in every place where there now is a subtreasury, such branches to take the place of the subtreasuries, and would go further in this direction by having branches located in every city of importance to assure a satisfactory service to every section of the country. Instead of having the national banks of the United States own the stock of this bank, I would make it unlawful for them to own any of its stock, but I would popularize the bank by having the government guarantee a dividend on the stock, of from three to four per cent, and I would offer the stock to the people for popular subscription.

S. C. ARBUCKLE
Assistant Secretary Ohio Bankers Association

in the circulating medium of the country of an average from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000, and would utilize the reserves in the banks in the central reserve cities for the double purpose details and all of it is most interesting. It came at the close of a talk on banking generally and, in brief, is this:

My ideas of a central bank differ widely from those of most people of such an institution, for the reason that they propose the establishment of a bank the capital stock of which shall be owned by the national banks of the United States and the management of which shall be vested in a board selected by the stockholders. Further than this, many of them advocate a provision in the organization of such a bank whereby the reserves of the national banks throughout the country should be carried with the central bank. This would revolutionize our present system and would materially reduce the business of every national bank of any size in every reserve city in the country, and for this reason the bankers in the larger centers would, naturally, oppose such a scheme.

Personally I have believed that the political problem in securing proper financial legislation would be more difficult of solution than the economic problem, and in consideration of this I have, in all of my study of the question, kept in mind the thought that we must devise some plan which will meet with the approval of the masses of our people and at the same time provide proper facilities for all sections of the country.

I do not believe that any law which is too radical or which is inclined to be very revolu-

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

IOWA bankers, at their Waterloo convention, endorsed the A. B. A. travelers' cheques and decided to invest the treasury surplus in Iowa securities. They also took steps to have trust company banking recognized in the state laws.

FURTHER than this, Iowa fell into line on the paid secretary plan favored in most states. They did not fix the time of election but it will be done at the next convention, as sentiment as developed in several votes was almost unanimous.

LOOK! who's here," at the Easton residence in Waterloo, and then you will know how J. D. had "acclamation" when proposed for the presidency of the Iowa association. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Van Vechten of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Carpenter of Monticello, George F. Orde, cashier of the First National Bank of Minneapolis, and Homer A. Miller, president of the Iowa National Bank of Des Moines.

J. ADAM BEDE told the Iowa bankers "if you want to stop stock gambling in New York, stop sending your money there. They haven't any of their own."

ROTATION in office, the "scale bug" which kills interest in so many state associations, was abolished in Iowa several years ago, so far as the presidency was concerned. At Waterloo a further death blow was given the rotation bug by the adoption of a resolution providing that the president, vice-president and treasurer should not rotate in office and that they should serve but one year each and not hold any other executive office until two years has elapsed.

THIS policy would have put life blood into many a state organization, and might have saved the big national organization from embarrassment more than once.

ANOTHER good Iowa idea. They settle the next year's convention city at the this year's convention always. Some states putter along because a few men wish to do nearly everything privately and personally and take the credit for it. Sometimes it leaves the location question open until it becomes a nuisance sance and a big, enthusiastic convention, the result of matured plans, becomes impossible.

NEXT year Iowa will meet in Des Moines, with Charlie McNider and Mason City running second. The registration at Waterloo was 895. At Sioux City it was 625; at Clinton, 441; at Cedar Rapids 500, and Des Moines must get out 1,000 to make good. This is up to Arthur Reynolds who invited the boys with a "gold-plate" visiting card.

GEORGE D. BARTLETT, who organized the group and insurance systems for the Wisconsin Bankers Association, now is with the American Bank Protection Co. of Minneapolis, although still a banker at heart. He preaches the doctrine of driving the bank burglar away before he has time to "blow" or burn a hole in your safe. He preaches it well, too, and will be glad to tell you how no bank so protected ever has lost one dollar by burglary.

DID you ever see W. W. Cook, of the Western Trust drive a golf ball? He is one of those eccentrics who cross over the left hand in front of the right, while using a right handed club. Recently he drove in this way a hooked ball, so crooked that it almost came to rest in his hip pocket. The waggish packer, John Cudahy, seeing the peculiar stroke suggested that he cross his legs over the same way he crosses his hands and "perhaps you can drive 'em straight."

GROUP Nine, Illinois, had a fine large meeting at Mt. Vernon, June 10th, and drew out some eloquent young speakers, such as F. T. Joyner, George Woodruff, Ed. P. Keshner, J. C. Eisenmeyer and R. L. Rinaman. Like all of its predecessors it was a record breaker. The new officers are H. J. Goddard of Mt. Carmel, president; E. P. Keshner, East St. Louis, vice-president; B. M. Smith of Salem, secretary, and W. M. Fogler of Vandalia, treasurer.

GEORGE A. NEAL, for 13 years cashier of the Ripley County Bank, at Doniphan, Mo., has retired and will be succeeded by Mr. Gerlach of Chester, Ills. Mr. Neal expects to make his future home in some other city which is greatly regretted in Doniphan.

ALL good Kansas bankers regret the resignation of W. S. Albright, assistant banking commissioner for the state. He quit to become special Kansas representative for the rehabilitated National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, Mo. It was a case of much better remuneration and Commissioner Dolley advised him to accept.

THE National Bank of Commerce has the largest capital of any bank in the country west of St. Louis. J. T. Bradley, former national bank examiner for Kansas, is its cashier. As a financial institution the bank is well known in Kansas and it intends to make a special effort to secure Kansas business as is indicated by the Albright appointment.

JOSEPH W. HERTFORD has resigned his position as national bank examiner, which he held for ten years, to establish himself in Houston, Texas, assume a place in the financial life of the community and become cashier of the Houston National Exchange Bank.

THE new cashier takes the place made vacant by the resignation of Nelson Munger on June 1st. His selection for the responsible position represents the composite judgment of the directors of the institution and the announcement is forthcoming accompanied with enthusiastic reference by the bank officials.

CASHIER.

Acting President Hoffman to the Ohio Bankers

A clear summary of banking progress in the state, and important suggestions made, by W. F. Hoffman, at the Toledo Convention

Members of the Ohio Bankers Association: While I am deeply sensible of the responsibility thrust upon me, and at the same time grateful for the estimate put upon my ability, it is with a feeling of sorrow and regret that I greet you to-day, when I remember that had not Fate and Death claimed our president, the late A. E. Rice, another would have stood in my place before you.

The year we are just completing shows gratifying increase in the membership of our association; also greater interest in the attendance at group meetings, this meaning an increased interest of the bankers in the smaller towns and villages; the nine groups of the state having held over twenty meetings during the year, with an average attendance of one hundred. These meetings have proved both instructive and pleasant, some of their speakers having a national as well as a local reputation.

The different groups have vied with each other, seemingly in the matter and manner of entertainment, and in smaller towns where service was limited, the wives, daughters, and sweethearts came gladly to the rescue, and thus insured success.

The result of these group meetings can scarcely be over estimated when we consider the close relations which they encourage between the city and country banker.

As you are aware the association established permanent headquarters in Columbus nearly two years ago, and one of its chief purposes was to keep in close touch with all bills introduced in the state legislature affecting banks, and I wish to call attention to one bill introduced in the last legislature, but not passed, namely, for the punishment of those who spread false rumors in regard to banks or trust companies, making them subject to a fine of five thousand dollars, or imprisonment for five years, or both. Pennsylvania has recently enacted such a law, and I wish to impress the importance of such a measure upon every banker in the state of Ohio, and hope that each one will use every endeavor to see that such a bill is passed by our next legislature. Nothing travels so fast as bad news, and many a good bank has been injured by false rumors. A run may create conditions that no bank can withstand, and heroic treatment is necessary in cases of this kind. There should be, and there must be, honest banking, and we should have provisions to secure it.

The legislature has provided an appropriation for the state superintendent of banks to increase the force of the bank examiners under the Thomas law; and this law may be made still more effective, first, by placing greater power of restriction in the issuing of articles of incorporation for banks than now is given to the secretary of state; and, second, the manner of procedure when a bank becomes insolvent. Therefore I would recommend a similar law to that of New York which allows the superintendent of banks to take possession, giving him power to make an effort to place the bank again on a sound footing without extra expense to the institution itself.

This has been done successfully in a great many cases.

During the last session of the legislature the secretary's office looked after the bills presented in the legislature each day, and kept tract of all hearings before the banking committees of the house and senate, and kept the legislative committee of the association advised. The association was thus in touch all the time with everything being done in the legislature, and the safeguarding the interests of its members. Perhaps some of the bankers of Ohio do not appreciate how much good has been done by the association in this respect. Upon several occasions the association has been instrumental in defeating legislation clearly opposed to the banking interests of the state; and on the other hand, they have aided greatly in getting good laws enacted.

Some of the clearing house associations have insisted that their members, and non-members clearing through them, carry a necessary reserve, and empower their manager to make examinations at stated intervals to see that such reserve is carried.

The Comptroller of the Currency has also signified a willingness that the national bank examiner, state examiners, and clearing house committees co-operate, and I quote from a letter of recent date on this point:

"My idea is to bring about a co-operation between the national bank examiners and the clearing houses, so that no matter whether the latter are large and well organized or small and crudely organized institutions they can, if they desire, utilize the results of the work of the national bank examiners. I have given this subject considerable consideration and it seems there ought to be no question but that the clearing houses and the examiners should work together. I am not only willing but anxious to give the clearing house committees through the examiners the information which they should possess, if after full consideration of the plan they desire to co-operate in the manner indicated.

"In the larger cities, for example, most critical situations have developed from time to time—so critical and widely disastrous in possible results that they have become national scandals—and frequently the clearing houses have had to step into the breach to prevent a further extension of disaster. On the other hand, a similar condition, but of less magnitude, may crop out in one of the smaller banks in a locality where clearing house facilities are very limited. When the bank examiner reports a run on the bank, or the solvency of the bank is questioned, the examiner is promptly directed by wire to convene the board of directors, go over the whole situation in detail, and advise this office of what the directors can and will do. If the reply is to the effect that the directors are financially unable to relieve the situation the examiner is then advised to lay the matter fully before the clearing house committee, if such a committee exists, or to consult with the other clearing house banks. Quite generally the clearing house banks step into the breach and save the situation. This is very often an unexpected burden and comes upon the clearing house banks without the slightest intimation of existing conditions. It therefore seems to me that as the clearing house banks are so often called upon to assume such a heavy burden and unexpected strain, that they ought to have information of any strained and dangerous conditions so as to be prepared for the climax when it does come, or to correct conditions before they have reached a climax. The plan suggested ought to be workable and put into operation in small as well as large localities. It should be understood that only really dangerous conditions should be reported, and it seems to me that if a plan can be evolved whereby the clearing house committees, the national bank examiners, and the state bank examiners could unite and work together, it would be a powerful lever for good conservative banking."

The pertinency of these remarks is apparent to all, and no further comment is necessary. Now I would like to say a few words on the law governing mortgages on real estate. As the law now stands it is illegal for a national bank to make loans on, or purchase paper, secured by real estate in any form. The best security a country banker can get is a mortgage on farm land or real estate in his locality. Yet, under the law, he cannot take a mortgage at the time of making the loan, but must wait until such loan is in jeopardy. This law should be so amended that a certain per cent of the bank's assets could be invested in mortgages, and the banker be able to protect himself when making the loan; and if the bankers of Ohio would agitate this question, and bring it to the attention of their congressmen, I believe that such an amendment to the law could be secured. This matter has been taken up, and is being discussed in several of the states, and one of the United States senators recently expressed himself as being unable to find any good reason why this should not be done.

While the deposits in both state and national banks have increased during the last year, the profits have not increased in the same ratio. Since the latter part of 1907 we have become more conservative. The lesson taught us at that time has had its effect. There is not that competition for deposits at high and unprofitable rates of interest, hence we have safer and more satisfactory banking; and I hope when prosperity returns once more we will not forget the lesson taught us in those strenuous days. I thank you.

Senator Thorpe at Minnetonka Convention

The constitution of this state wisely provides that the legislature may, by a two-thirds vote, pass a general banking law. The wisdom and necessity of this provision was well tested during the panic of 1893 and the following years when many visionary propositions were made and defeated because of this provision. At the beginning of the last session we frequently were asked, "Do you expect to get a two-thirds vote for a bill creating a separate banking department? Don't you know that the sentiment against more departments is very strong?" We also were told: "We admit it is a good bill and ought to pass, but, remember what we tell you, that with the present hostility to more departments the proposition cannot get the required number of votes in both houses." The parties who brought out this plausible reasoning forgot to take into account the change in public sentiment in regard to banking and bankers. Many of our farmers, business and professional men are stockholders and these, together with the numerous customers, are all in favor of any measure that will add to the closer inspection and safety of the banking business and each community realizes more than ever the importance of having sound financial institutions in their midst.

It generally is known that the banks in Minnesota are well managed by competent and accommodating officials and that they have a state association, well organized with a president, secretary and executive council who first make sure that they are right and after that there is something doing. These were strong factors in bringing about this much desired legislation. It is fair to state here that the present public examiner, with his many other important duties, did as well as any reasonable man could expect. He had too much on his hands and the opinion prevailed that the financial institutions coming under the supervision of the state and representing over one hundred millions in assets were entitled to a department of their own. I will not recount the provisions of the bill nor will I tell you how this or that item was cut. Here was a chance! Think of it! A superintendent of banks with a salary of $5,000 and eight examiners, clerks, stenographers, etc. When it was stated that banks pay more taxes than any other business or property and that this legislation was in the interest of sound banking and for the protection of the depositor, and that the state could well afford to pay the extra expense they shook their heads and said: "We cannot stand for that." Then it was that the bankers came to the rescue and offered to pay a good share of the added expense and the bill provided for about three times the former payments to the state. The most pleasant part of it all is, that, so far no financial institution coming under the jurisdiction of this new department and consequently paying the additional fees has found any fault or complaint but has expressed satisfaction and approval of the result and so after all objections had been overcome, in the language of the presiding officers, the bill passed with its title agreed to.

My subject tells me to say something about results. We will know more about that a little later. One result was anticipated, however, as the following incident will prove: One day an active legislator came and asked this plain question, "Why do you want this separate banking department bill to pass?" After hearing the various reasons enumerated and enlarged upon, he said, "You may as well give the real argument. Is it not because the bankers want to kill off any legislation providing for the guaranty of bank deposits? There are two bills pending on this subject and you want to make them impossible." He was told that the reasons given controlled, but, that the passage of this bill would undoubtedly bring about the result he had predicted. So, we already have results.

Next in importance is (chapter 179) "An act providing for and regulating proceedings against and liquidation of delinquent financial corporations and bankers." This is modeled after the New York law recommended by Governor Hughes. We have reports of the good that has resulted in that state and there is no reason to doubt that it will be equally beneficial to the depositors and stockholders in this state whenever it is found necessary to apply its provisions. We all know stories of waste under the old system.

Ever since the comptroller of currency found it permissible for national banks to establish a savings department and use the word "savings" in their advertising, the state banks have, in many localities, been at a disadvantage. Several attempts have been made to remedy this but all were unsuccessful until this year when a law was passed placing state banks on par with the national system in this matter. Chapters 124 and 362 provide that banks designated as depositories for public funds may secure the same by placing surety bonds for the amount of the deposit and not as before, having to pay for twice the amount they are liable for. Where the banks prefer, they can place approved bonds as security for the public money they are entrusted with. The saving will be considerable and the state, counties and cities will be amply protected.

Attention also is directed to the enactments strengthening the law relating to abolishing private banks and improving the provisions relating to trust companies. Neither should we forget to refer to the change in regard to the laws governing demand notes and the new law compelling uniformity in bills of lading which, judging from past experience, should prove to be of considerable importance to shippers and bankers.

The legislature of 1909 has been charged with many sins of omission and commission according to the way it appears to various individuals or interests, but it cannot be accused of having failed to provide needed and wholesome legislation for the protection and upbuilding of financial institutions working on a conservative basis. I believe that this work of the legislature will encourage business, protect the depositor and strengthen confidence. These are results we confidently expect.

A new bank is to be organized at Wagoner, S. C.

Illinois Group System

The group system has passed the organization, or experimental period, in Illinois. This year's meetings which have all been successful, has demonstrated the wisdom of placing the Illinois association on this basis. All of the meetings have been well attended and much interest has been aroused on behalf of the various towns and cities in each group in the matter of securing the convention for next year. The two older groups, numbers One and Two, have now held five annual meetings.

Number One first met at Moline, then Galesburg, Kewanee, Monmouth, and Aledo. Now Morrison, Princeton, and other towns are anxious to have the convention next year.

Group Number Two has always met in Peoria, having held five annual meetings there and the membership seems well pleased with going to Peoria, because of the facilities that Peoria has, and the enthusiasm that Peoria bankers always put into a convention, but now that Galesburg is in Group Number Two, Knox county having been added to the Peoria group, there is some talk of next year's meeting being held in Galesburg.

Group Number Three met in Rockford for two conventions and this year in Freeport. Now Dixon, DeKalb, Belvidere, and other towns in the group are anxious to have the convention.

Group Number Four was organized and held its first meeting in Chicago at the Mid-Day Club rooms. The following meeting was held in Joliet; this year Elgin entertained and next year the talk is of Aurora. Waukegan, Lake Forest and some of the Fox River resort towns are anxious to be considered.

Group Number Five is the only group in Illinois which meets semiannually. Their first meeting was held in Bloomington, the second in Pontiac. The following year they met in Kankakee, and this year's first meeting was held at Bloomington, and the second and final meeting for the year of this group will be held at Ottawa, on June 23d. There are many towns in this group that can entertain. Mendota, LaSalle, and Streator, in LaSalle county are yet to be heard from.

Group Number Six was born at Hoopston and recollections of the corn dinner served there will always make the membership yearn for a return engagement. The second convention was held in Champaign, and this year the delegates went through Champaign to Paris, where a successful meeting was held. It is understood that Charleston and Mattoon would like the convention next year.

Group Number Seven was organized at Springfield and met there twice, but this year Taylorville entertained and the understanding is the executive committee of the group has already accepted an invitation from Decatur. Most any of the important towns in this group can entertain, as the McKinley Traction System makes all parts of the district accessible to the membership.

Number Eight was organized at Jacksonville and the work of the Jacksonville bankers, led by Mr. Crabtree, is pleasantly remembered. Quincy entertained the following year and this year Beardstown did the honors in good style. The understanding is that Carthage will want the convention next year.

Number Nine was organized at East St. Louis. This is the biggest group in the state and includes eighteen counties that stretch from the Mississippi River on the west to the Wabash on the east. They held their second meeting in East St. Louis, but this year were beautifully entertained by the bankers of Mount Vernon. Any one of the county seat towns of any of the eighteen counties included in the group are capable of entertaining satisfactorily. Mt. Carmel, the home of the present president, Mr. Goddard, Albion, Centralia, Nashville, Fairfield, or any of the more important towns could care for a convention.

Group Number Ten was organized at Cairo and the second meeting was held at Harrisburg. This year they were entertained at Marion, while next year, Metropolis, Carmi, Cairo, and a number of towns are talked about for the convention.

Sheridan Trust and Savings Bank

A new bank will be opened at Evanston and Wilson avenues, in the heart of the north shore residence district on July 1st. It will be known as the Sheridan Trust and Savings Bank, and is capitalized at $200,000, with a paid-in surplus of $20,000.

W. J. Klingenberg, manager of the collection department of the First National Bank, has been elected president. W. G. Arnold, secretary of the A. B. Dick company, is vice-president.

The directors of the institution are all well-known business men of Chicago, and the list of stockholders contains such names as James A. Patten, Mason B. Starring, Chauncey Keep, Edward Dickinson and Roy O. West.

The bank will conduct a general banking business, including a savings department, and will also operate safe deposit vaults. The First National, from which service Mr. Klingenberg retires, is not interested in any way except to wish every success to the venture.

Banking Conditions in South Carolina

Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen of the South Carolina Bankers Association:

I have pleasure in submitting herewith my fifth annual report as your secretary and treasurer. To begin with I will say that the association is in a more flourishing condition than ever before in its history, leaving you to judge of the correctness of this statement from what follows. There are forty-odd well organized state associations and, with the probable exception of Missouri, South Carolina, from a percentage standpoint, ranks first in the United States. This proves that you all agree with my report of last year in which I said I was sure that nothing less than "the very top" would be satisfactory to South Carolinians. Let us not have any "probable exception" next year, but stand clearly and securely in first place. It would be easier to tell of those not members than of those who are. But I will not expose publicly by name the six, lonesome banks who have not joined us. Rather let me say that the other two hundred and sixty-one banks are members, and their names compose an honor roll, duly recorded, and which will be published of which we are all most proud. The combined capital of the six non-member banks is only $157,250, while their combined surplus-profits is an amount too negligible to mention. Five of these six have a combined capital of only $57,250, or an average of but $11,450 each.

At the last convention 224 members were reported. Two of these have been lost, one by consolidation with another member bank and one by failure in business. Since the organization of our association it is our proud boast never to have lost a member through failure to pay annual renewal dues. The one lone case so reported last year rejoined a few weeks later. There have been added during the year 39 new members, giving us, as above stated, a present membership of 261 out of a total of 267, or a percentage of 98. The 267 banks in the state are classified as 33 national banks, all members; 230 state banks, all members but five, and 4 private banks, all members but one.

The executive committee has held two regular meetings during the year, both in Columbia. One was in August, 1908, and the other in January, 1909. The January meeting was a joint session with the legislative committee. As the chairmen of both these committees are present and will give detailed reports of what was done it will not be necessary for me to include such information here.

Last year's report showed that we were just getting the fidelity and burglary bond department in good shape. Had it been continued the probability is it would have proven profitable alike to the association and the individual members. Our contract to write such insurance for our members was ordered cancelled by the executive committee, however, and we have nothing of moment to report at this time, the action of the last convention having put a practical stop to all such efforts. I confess that I reluctantly gave notice of cancellation of this contract, for I am still of the belief that such an arrangement is for the best interest of a large number of our members.

Two large safe lock companies desire to enter into an agreement with our association to clean and guarantee the time-locks of our members at a uniform rate of $9 per lock. As the usual rate for such work is from $10 to $25 per lock it would appear that this would prove a most satisfactory contract for our members. Such banks as enter into it would save each year about the amount of the annual dues to the association. By entering into such contract the association assumes no liability of any kind and no member is obliged to sign. The association simply recommends the arrangement and agrees not to make a similar one with any other party. The reputation and standing of the companies assure reliable service and no member need hesitate on this account. The same companies have similar contracts in force in a large number of states and letters are on file to prove the universal satisfaction given. I heartily endorse the offer and trust the convention will accept.

Many states have adopted the group system and commend it most highly. It serves to bring together once a year, or oftener, the bankers of each particular group, who have a community of interest, and affords opportunity for the discussion of local matters in a way that is not enjoyed at the larger annual convention of the association as a whole. So far from impairing the usefulness or detracting from the efficiency of the general association the plan is reported to add to the interest in general affairs, to increase the membership and cause a larger and more enthusiastic attendance at the general meetings, making them more beneficial and help-

There has been no request from our members for such a system, but it is possible that our state might very advantageously be divided into four or five groups, each with its chairman, secretary, etc. I feel that we should neglect no opportunity that will add to the interest and general welfare and practical prosperity of our association, and therefore ask that you give this suggestion your consideration.

I desire to thank our most worthy president and the members of our committees for valuable assistance given in promoting the general welfare of the association. Without their aid and the support of the members generally, we could not possibly have reached the success we have attained. Copying largely from my friend W. F. Keyser, secretary of the Missouri Association, I close by saying that the only opportunity we now have to increase our membership is in the organization of new banks, as only six old ones remain non-members. With practically every bank a member and every member a worker, certainly the South Carolina Bankers Association should succeed in every good undertaking. Let us strive to make the number of workers reach the same point of unanimity as has been reached by the membership.

Growth and Importance of Iron Mining in Minnesota

An intensely interesting paper on the development of iron mining in Minnesota was read to the bankers at the Lake Minnetonka convention by W. J. Olcott, an expert from the city of Duluth. He developed his subject from the smallest beginnings, giving dates, figures and results with the greatest fidelity. Later he summed up as follows:

Let us for a moment consider what advance has been made in practically fifty years, or during the life of many here present. The first shipment from Lake Superior was 132 tons in 1856. In 1907 there was shipped 42,266,668 tons. Since 1880, which was the first year in which two million tons were produced, the output from the Lake Superior mines has doubled every six-year period. Based upon this rate of increase the time is not far distant when such shipments will reach one hundred million tons, and especially when we know that the consumption per capita of pig iron has increased from .05 of a ton in 1876 to .30 of a ton in 1907. From two or three mines on one range, we now have 162 active producing mines on five ranges. In place of a few small sailing vessels carrying 300 to 400 tons we have a fleet of over 2,000 ore carriers, some of which are 600 feet long and carry 12,000 tons. Instead of unloading the ore at Sault Ste. Marie and re-loading, we have three locks capable of taking the largest boats and through which in 1907, 58,217,214 tons of freight were passed. In 1856 Bessemer ore sold at $8.00 per ton; in 1873, at $12.00 per ton; while in 1897 it sold at $2.80 per ton, and to-day the price is $4.53 per ton. The transportation charge per ton of ore from upper lake docks to Lake Erie ports, instead of being from $3.50 to $6.25 as it was in 1866, averages now about 75 cents, and this includes an unloading charge.

Lake Minnetonka Convention

The mines are served by eight railroads, carrying the ore to eight ports and unloading into 26 docks, which have an aggregate storage capacity of 1,328,616 tons. These railroads have a hauling capacity of 250,000 tons per day, while the docks of the Duluth, Mesabi & Northern have the record of loading 165,000 tons into 16 boats in a single day.

Some of the results accomplished on the Mesabi Range are of peculiar interest. In 1907 there were nine mines each of which shipped over one million tons, while the Hull-Rust made the world record of 2,000,000 tons in one short season of 224 days. Since 1892, approximately 97,500,000 cubic yards of stripping have been removed. In the same period, 106,451,000 tons of ore have been mined by steam shovels, working only during the seven months shipping season, while including ore from underground mines the amount is increased to 167,527,143, which is equal to all the shipments from the Lake Superior ranges up to 1900. At the close of this year there will have been removed by steam shovels on the Mesabi Range a yardage of stripping material and ore equal to the total excavation required for the Panama Canal. During the year 1908, 5,800,000 tons of coal were shipped from Lake Erie ports to Duluth and Superior, a distance of almost 1,000 miles, at a rate of 35 cents per ton, which is about half the charge for teaming such coal from dock to your residence.

What has the iron ore industry done for Minnesota? From a barren wilderness, practically inaccessible, the northeastern portion of the state has been transformed into one of the busiest districts in the world. Towns have sprung up as if by magic; modern improvements have been made and easy communication with the outside world established. Every town has its modern, well-constructed and equipped school buildings and churches, as well as adequate water, sewer, and electric lighting systems. In 1907, 15,799 men were employed on the two ranges. There has been a continual increase in rates per day and a more constant demand for labor. Instead of intermittent operation with the attendant results of large stockpiles of unsold ore at lower lake ports and men out of employment at the mines, the output conforms approximately to the demands of trade, thus insuring greater uniformity of reasonable prices and more continuous employment to all engaged in this great industry. The bonus system started by the United States Steel Corporation and the privilege of employees subscribing each year to the stock of that corporation under very favorable conditions, is also an advance toward the closer relationship between capital and labor. There was paid out in 1907 by the mines for labor, supplies, taxes, and royalties almost $21,000,000. The railroads paid out in taxes, based upon earnings for ore, $933,792. Most of this money remained in the state, and I trust each of you gentlemen felt its influence in some degree. The last report of the auditor of Minnesota shows the total amount of money paid to the state treasury by the several counties of the state out of the general property tax. It likewise shows the amount paid by the state treasury to the several counties for school and other purposes. The difference between what the county pays to the state and what it receives is the net general tax of such county. The same report shows that St. Louis county pays 67.5 per cent of the entire net general property tax of the state, and that the other 84 counties pay the remaining 32.5 per cent. In addition to this the ore roads of St. Louis county paid into the state treasury for the year ending 1907, 28.2 per cent of the entire gross earnings tax of all the railroads of Minnesota. These figures would certainly indicate that St. Louis county is contributing its full share of state taxes.

In years past when all the markets were practically east of Chicago and the head of the lakes, it was impracticable to manufacture iron and steel products on the shores of Lake Superior, but the growing importance of western markets and the increasing wealth and development of the western states will, we believe, very shortly lead to the establishment of modern, economical plants and rebuilding of extensive iron and steel manufacturing at the head of the lakes.

W. I. PRINCE
Duluth, Minn.

When these are established many other allied industries will follow, giving employment for a large force of industrial workers and furnishing a home market for all the products that the farmers can raise or produce. It is in the building up of its manufactures that Minnesota must in a great measure rely for her future prosperity, for the forests will soon be depleted and the lands are gradually losing their fertility. If this is true there should be mutuality of interests between all portions of the state and a united effort to build up a sentiment throughout the state, favorable to the establishment of home manufacturing and an assurance that capital invested in such enterprises will have just treatment and be permitted to earn a fair and safe return upon legitimate investment.

Thief Outwits Bankers

The Indiana Bankers Association officials are somewhat chagrined over their failure to land Ward B. Hiner, an Indiana man who is wanted on the charge of embezzling about $1,200 from the First National Bank at Flora, Ind. The case was a record breaker in more ways than one. Harry C. Webster, a detective employed by the association, returned Wednesday night after a chase covering more than 6,000 miles and with a record of having arrested Hiner five different times, only to be thwarted in his plans of getting the fugitive back to Indiana because of what he said was a political plot in Oklahoma. Incidentally requisition papers issued by Governor Marshall did not have much weight in the legal struggle over Hiner's capture in Oklahoma City.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

At the twentieth annual convention of the Minnesota Bankers Association last Monday and Tuesday at the Tonka Bay hotel, Lake Minnetonka, the delegates, something like 500 in all, indorsed Senator Knute Nelson's measure pending in congress which, if passed, will permit national banks to loan money on real estate security. They indorsed also the American Bankers Association travelers' cheques, and approved a suggestion made by the retiring president, Joseph Chapman, Jr., in his annual address that Minnesota's agricultural possibilities be more systematically studied and exploited. The indorsement contained the authority for the president to appoint a committee to study the situation. This move on the part of bankers is part of a general campaign started at the group meetings to give Minnesota a fair show among other well advertised states, none of which show better opportunities for financial advancement to its settlers.

Officers Elected

W. I. Prince, cashier of the City National Bank of Duluth, was advanced to the presidency of the association and L. A. Huntoon of Moorhead, the First National Bank, was put into the office of vice-president to succeed Mr. Prince. L. Whitmore of the First National at Wabasha and Charles R. Frost, respectively treasurer and secretary, were returned to office without dissent.

The four members elected to the executive council are F. E. Holton of the N. W. National Bank, George H. Prince of the Merchants Bank of St. Paul, W. A. Shaw of Clear Water State Bank, and George F. Orde of the First National Bank of Minneapolis.

J. S. Pomeroy, cashier of the Security National Bank, who disclaims all leaning toward banking politics, was named for Minnesota's vice-president in the American Bankers Association. O. H. Havill of St. Cloud, the only candidate, was nominated to the association for member of the executive council to succeed D. S. Culver of St. Paul.

Program Carried Out

The program was carried out as advertised in advance, except that F. I. Kent was not present to read his paper on the travelers' cheques of the A. B. A. The addresses were as follows: "The Development of the Mining and Transportation of the Iron Ores of the Lake Superior District," W. J. Oleott of Duluth, president of the Oliver Iron Mining Company; "Bonds and Burglary Insurance," W. B. Joyce, president National Surety Company; "The Tariff," Honorable Frank M. Nye, M. C. of Minneapolis; "Recent Bank Legislation," State Senator L. O. Thorpe of Willmar; "Postal Savings Banks," G. E. Roberts, president Commercial National of Chicago; "Problems of the American Bankers Association," Col. F. E. Farnsworth of New York, secretary; "The American Bankers Association Travelers' Checks," F. I. Kent, vice-president Bankers Trust Company of New York. Fifteen minute talks by O. J. Schumacher, L. E. Wakefield and G. H. McCarthy of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth Chapters.

W. I. Prince made the report for the delegates to the Denver convention and the group secretaries reported for the congressional district meetings of the spring.

Entertainment a Success

The amusement features were entertaining. After several days' rain, Minnetonka was at its best and the steamer excursion and picnic dinner on Big Island was enjoyable. On the evening of the first day a vaudeville performance was given in the island pavilion under the direction of C. R. Frost. A chartered steamer drove around the lake at the will of the bebadged bankers and added to the charm of the occasion.

The Home Savings Bank of Wilber, Neb., has filed articles of organization with a capital of $25,000. H. Gund, E. W. Miskell, H. Hinkey, F. Novak, J. I. Moore, W. T. Auld and J. J. Novak are promoters.

Surety and Burglary Insurance by an Expert

Wm. B. Joyce, president of the National Surety Company, before the Minnesota bankers at Lake Minnetonka

It is with pardonable pride I refer to the fact that my first experience in the surety business was had in the state of Minnesota, as local agent in Minneapolis and St. Paul, nearly eighteen years ago, having in 1891 entered the service of a company, the business of which was succeeded to by the National Surety Company, of New York, of which I now have the honor of being president. It was directly through the support given to me by the bankers, railroads, grain companies, and other business houses in the state of Minnesota, that five years ago I was called upon, without any previous notice, to accept the presidency of this company, at present being represented in this state by Wm. B. Joyce & Co., a corporation I organized in 1901, to succeed the firm I established about eighteen years ago.

Since that time I venture to say there has been greater progress made in surety and burglary insurance generally, than in any other line in the category of "miscellaneous" insurance. In thirty years the total surety and fidelity premium income of all companies has amounted to over $100,000,000, of which over $50,000,000 were written during the past five years. In 1879, the total was $725, against $12,550,022 in 1908. In the burglary business the premiums have jumped from $6,300 in 1892, to $2,485,800 in 1908. There are now approximately 30,000 agents and employees of surety companies in America.

The remarkable development of the surety business is largely due to the enterprise of the managers of surety companies, who adopted and carried out a plan of education of the benefits of corporate surety-ship to a degree which actually entailed enormous losses to the stockholders of those companies during the educational period. Many companies made rates wholly inadequate which, coupled with exceedingly high expenses and losses, brought about a most unfortunate condition of affairs, as far as the stockholders were concerned, but there were, fortunately, only a very few instances of any loss to the policy-holders thereby. During the past few years the insurance department superintendents of the various states, having become alarmed, put into effect a more rigid accounting on the part of the companies, required heavier loss and premium reserves, and gave the various company executives their moral support in an effort to uplift the business, so that it might reach the high standard in the public estimation to which it is fairly entitled. The business is high grade, closely associated with, and in many respects identical to, the banking profession which occupies such a high standard in our commercial life. The result of the effort on the part of the insurance authorities and the surety company executives, it is believed, will be of material benefit to the public and to the companies.

I quote from a report of Hon. E. E. Rittenhouse, ex-commissioner of insurance of the state of Colorado: "When a company undertakes to guarantee the solvency of others, there should be no question about the solvency of the guarantor," to which I add, surety companies guaranteeing the honesty of others, must themselves be absolutely honest with those guaranteed.

Surety companies are engaged in the business of guaranteeing the performance of contracts, becoming surety on bonds of administrators, executors, guardians, guaranteeing the fidelity of city, county and state treasurers, and guaranteeing to the city, county, and state the security of public moneys on deposit in banking institutions; therefore no one will question the vital importance of keeping the companies solvent. In no insurance business is the public quite so deeply interested as in the surety business which guarantees the security of public moneys, guarantees the integrity of public officials, and guarantees protection to the widows and orphans by their bonds covering fiduciaries of estates. In the surety business as in the banking business, it is not capital and surplus, but honesty and aggressive, conservative management that insures success.

Three years since, upon invitation, I went before the insurance commissioners of the United States, assembled in convention in the City of Washington, and urged upon the commissioners the importance of regulating surety companies so they would not expose themselves to unnecessarily large hazards. In some instances I learned there were companies executing bonds without any protection whatever for amounts that exceeded their entire capital and surplus; in one instance a surety company executed a bond for more than three times its entire capital and surplus. Later when I appeared before the secretary of the treasury of the United States and urged that the govern-

Why Bankers are Studying the South

The state bankers meetings in the South have been attended this year as never before. Every northern city of any size sent representatives, not seeking new accounts alone, but sizing up the country. Many northern investors do most of their borrowing at home for use in southern business ventures and exploitation. Naturally the banker likes to see for himself the remarkable opportunities which are everywhere attracting northern capital to the South. The state conventions give the chance to inquire informally about such matters. The general opinion of the northern banker is that the area of greatest growth must come in the South in the next ten or twenty years. It is pointed out that in crops alone new methods can increase the yield in many cases ten fold. Immigrants are being landed at southern ports where labor at good wages is plenty. The need for this assistance is shown by statistics: In the north Atlantic states, according to the census of 1900, there is a population of 22.6 foreign born; in the north central states it was 15.8 per cent; in the west 20.7 per cent. In the south Atlantic states the foreign population is only 2.1 per cent and in the south central 2.5. The South is coming into its own because modern industrialism has reached them at the opportune time. "Farsighted financiers," says the Washington Post, "railroad men and other leaders of industry, are almost unanimous in predicting that the greatest development of the next two decades in this country will occur in the South."

In a recent address delivered to the students of the University of Carolina, President Finley of the Southern railway said: "In whatever career the young man of the South may select, he will find opportunities at home among his own people. He will not find it necessary to go either to the North or to the West. As time goes on he will find these opportunities in increasing abundance, for the economic strength of the South, already great, is constantly increasing. The wealth of our section in natural resources is being supplemented by increased financial strength, and southern communities are becoming better able to finance their own enterprises and less dependent on outside capital. The South needs every one of her young men, and those who are faithful to her she will bountifully reward. The South has never been a boom country. When the South talks good times it means what it says, having experienced too much adversity in the past to be overconfident. Nowhere is there a country so favored by nature as to climate, natural resources and wealth. Little wonder that the northern investor and the northern banker turn in complete accord to this great division of the country, destined to double its wealth every decade from the present onward."

Our State Papers

Bankers have but one form of state papers. They comprise the annual addresses of the presidents of the forty-odd state bankers associations as delivered at the conventions, attended by bankers and leading financiers. These papers are important just to the extent that the president of the association is a studious conscientious man and not merely a money changer or a man who sought the place for the distinction it brings. These papers for 1909 are of a very high order. As proof of this note those delivered this week in Minnesota, Ohio, New York and South Carolina. They should be preserved in permanent form, as well as in the annual proceedings books. If the publishing houses who issue financial and economic works would but collect the annual addresses of the state presidents of the bankers associations they would have an annual unequalled in the world from any other source. As a rule the president discusses banking and business conditions for the year within his own state and refers to general conditions only as they affect banking and it is a literature not being produced from any other source. There is a movement on to abolish the rotation in office in state associations which will bring bigger men into the field. Some of the best bankers in a state never get to be president of a state association for the reason that in so many states it is necessary to first serve on the council (Illinois is a horrible example); then get elected to be its chairman and routine does the rest. After being chairman of the council you are vice-president one year and president the next.

It thus requires from four to six years to get to be a state president in most of the states and the holding of as many offices. Iowa has abolished the rotation method entirely and other states will soon see the wisdom of the thing and follow suit. Six times as many men may thus be honored by the state association and oftentimes six times better men for the highest office may be obtained.

We would have more general interest in association work if the rotation in office could be abolished. We would get bigger men for president and have better annual state papers. The organizations would have more influence on legislation and infinitely better standing with the public by the abolition of bankers association politics.

New Kansas Bank Examiners

State Bank Commissioner J. N. Dolley has announced the appointment of V. C. Raines of Perry, Dallas county, as a deputy bank examiner. Mr. Raines is the son of J. L. This is the fifth bank examiner to be appointed by Commissioner Dolley and he still has eight to appoint. The five who have been appointed are: Frank Denton of Attica; S. P. Moore, of Lawrence; H. D. Crosby, of Wichita; P. S. Hollingsworth, of Independence, and V. C. Raines of Perry.

The $500,000 of new stock will be offered at par to stockholders of record July 1st and will be paid for and delivered by July 8th. The book value of the stock after the increase will be around $195 to $200 a share. The same rate of dividend that is now paid—12 per cent—will be continued on the increased capitalization. The present stock is $400 a share bid and none is offered.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., June 9.—Claud Gatch, United States bank examiner, who recently discovered a shortage of $137,000 in the funds of the Lewiston National Bank at Lewiston, Idaho, since made good by the stockholders, is conducting a searching inquiry and it is expected several arrests will follow. F. W. Kettenbach, president, says the defalcations by former employees of the bank cover a period of five years. He implicates J. E. Chapman and Clarence Robnett. Chapman is a son of J. L. Chapman, former postmaster, and was teller of the bank several years. Robnett was bookkeeper of the bank until a few months ago. His whereabouts is not known, though Mr. Kettenbach claims to have obtained a confession from him at Pittsburgh following the discovery of the shortage. Chapman has gone to Lewiston from Seattle. He denies having received a penny of the bank's money. The Lewiston National Bank and the Idaho Trust Company were consolidated a year ago, when the capital and surplus of the Lewiston National was $200,000 and the capital of the trust company $400,000. The aggregate deposits to-day are $900,000, of which $450,000 is subject to check. The cash on hand is $200,000. F. W. Kettenbach and other prominent Lewiston politicians were interested in the bank before the land-fraud trials at Moscow in which Kester, Kettenbach, West Dwyer and Robnett were convicted. The court of appeals at San Francisco has called for a new trial. Clarence W. Robnett, convicted of subornation of perjury in the Moscow trials, was bookkeeper at the bank. He is now being sought by Pittsburg police for alleged bad paper given a Pittsburgh restaurant as an officer of the Spokane Orchard Land Company. George H. Kester resigned as cashier of the institution shortly after the close of the trials. S. T. McGubbins, representing the surety companies, has nothing to say at present, except that he will go over the matters carefully and report to his home office.

Fidelity National in New Quarters

Fidelity National Bank of Spokane is now comfortably located in its new quarters in the Hyde Building, Riverside Avenue and Wall Street, where it has a ten-year lease. It is equipped with modern vaults and handsome fixtures. The transfer was made on May 29th, and the bank was ready for business the morning of June 1st. Two heavy draft horses, hitched to a low dray hauled the two safes containing $1,500,000, $250,000 of which was in currency, mostly gold, through the streets on moving. Four men accompanied the vehicle. They were not armed. George S. Brooke, president, and A. W. Lindsay, cashier, were among the spectators. Though the streets were filled with pedestrians and shoppers, few were aware that the dray carried the most valuable load ever hauled in the city. The Fidelity National is the oldest bank in Spokane county. It occupied for four and a half years the room it has just vacated in the Symons Building, prior to which it was for ten years in the Eagle Building where the Bank of Montreal is now quartered.

A National for Palouse

Palouse, Wash., in the heart of the rich wheat belt of the same name, south of Spokane is to have a strong banking institution. It will be known as the National Bank of Palouse and will be under the management of R. P. Ward, formerly of Waseca, Minn., and George C. Jewett, formerly of Columbus, N. D. It is to have a capital of $50,000, the stockholders being R. P. Ward, president of the Farmers' National Bank, Waseca, Minn., and vice-president of the North America Lumber and Supply Company of Canada; E. A. Konantz, St. Paul, president of the North America Lumber and Supply Company of Canada, and of the Citizens' Lumber Company of Alberta; C. F. Konantz, St. Paul, retired capitalist; George C. Jewett, until recently vice-president of the First International Bank of Columbus, N. D., and formerly cashier of the First National Bank of Kensal, N. D. While a location has not been definitely decided on, it is expected that arrangements will be made to secure the Palouse State Bank building, where it will open for business early in July.

Brings Suit against Former Bank Officers

Maurice J. Hawkinson, president, has instituted suit in the Spokane superior court against H. M. Boone, W. W. Boone, and A. R. Patten, formerly connected with the defunct Palouse State Bank of Palouse, Wash., alleging that he was defrauded in being induced to buy a block of bank stock shortly before the institution closed its doors. He alleges that upon representations of the defendants that the bank was in flourishing condition, he purchased 250 shares of stock, giving notes for $15,000, real estate in Franklin county, worth $10,000, and several notes of a face value of $1,272, payable to himself. He also alleges that later, on representation of H. M. Boone that he had been elected deputy bank inspector, and would have to give all his time to that office, he was induced to purchase another block of 144 shares in the bank, paying for the same partly in cash and partly by a transfer of real estate. He asks to have the property retransferred to him and the notes cancelled.

Spokane Bank Clearings

Bank clearings for May gained $5,897,605, equal to 24 per cent. The total for May, 1908, is $24,109,561, and for May, 1909, $30,007,166. For the 26 banking days in the month the clearings averaged $1,200,000.

Trustee Company Pays Dividends

Trustee Company of Spokane, of which Harry A. Flood is president, has disbursed $14,375 to unit-holders in Spokane. This represents the earnings on the rental of three buildings here between March 1st and June 1st. Two further dividends will be paid on units this year, one on September 10th and another on December 10th, at which time a surplus is also declared. The Wolverton, Hyde, and Eagle buildings, three of the most central corners in Spokane are owned by investors in the company.

An Open Forum Dedicated to the Associated Chapters A. I. of B. in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Independent Action and Universal Membership

Fred. I. Kent on A. B. A. Travelers Cheques

Vice-President Fred I. Kent of the Bankers Trust Company, New York, was accorded a warm welcome by the bankers at the Lake Minnetonka convention. In his great fight on the express company money order, in behalf of the American Bankers Association, he won an army of adherents. Now that the big association has put a travelers' cheque in the field to supplant the express money order, Mr. Kent still is in charge of the work as vice-president of the Bankers Trust Company, which has been entrusted with issuing the cheques for the association. Mr. Kent said in part:

The American Bankers Association has developed from a body of men representing a few banks in the United States, who met once a year for the purpose of getting acquainted and incidentally discussing in a cursory manner, subjects of interest to bankers, into an association known throughout the world for its effective work. As the membership has increased and the possibilities of such an organization for the good of all concerned have become more and more apparent, the association has entered actively into the actual accomplishment of matters of great importance.

Among the reforms undertaken by the association, and which is the subject of this address, is the American Bankers Association travelers' cheques. In a country such as ours, having over 20,000 banks and bankers situated in many cities and towns spread over a vast territory, it has heretofore been impossible for any one of the 20,000 banks, no matter what its size or standing, to give its customers who desire to travel, paper over its own name, payable to its customers' order, that every other bank in the United States would be safe in honoring. The reason for this lies in the fact that it is impracticable for 20,000 bankers to keep up files with the signatures and forms of the other 19,999, even if it were possible for them to be familiar at all times with the standing of their brother institutions. Large metropolitan banks having numerous correspondents throughout the United States were in position to give their traveling customers exchange that they could cash at many different points, and where their correspondents had specimens of the signatures of such banks on file, which is not always the case however, such exchange could be cashed by these correspondents without practical risk, provided the banker wrote a letter in each case identifying the holder of his exchange by means of the tourist's signature. But the traveler does not always follow the route that he lays out before starting on a trip, neither does he always travel in line with the correspondents of any particular institution.

While bankers are usually good natured the world over, and take daily risks in order to accommodate tourists, cashing all kinds of paper for them on and off, yet in every case where tourists have carried a single banker's paper, there has been a question on each presentation by the customer as to whether he would be able to obtain his money. Bankers honoring such exchange have had to depend more on the appearance of the traveler than upon his knowledge of the paper. This has made domestic letters of credit of doubtful value to banks' customers, except at the points mentioned in the list of correspondents.

In other parts of the world, due to branch banking systems, it has been possible for bankers in the United States to arrange letters of credit, which are thoroughly safe for a tourist to carry, and are of real practical use to him. Foreign bankers used to be somewhat slow in drawing drafts against letters of credit, which resulted in a demand for so-called travelers' cheques, that are practically letters of credit divided into such small amounts that miscellaneous concerns are willing to chance cashing them, where they are obtaining a profit in exchange by so doing.

The American Bankers Association travelers' cheque was devised for the purpose of making it possible for American bankers to give their customers exchange over their own name, lending dignity to the selling banker and impressing his customers with his standing that could be safely honored by his fellow bankers throughout the United States and the world, and by hotels and shopkeepers throughout the world, where tourists would be apt to desire such service. The association has successfully accomplished this, and has worked out a system that is practically established today, because of the fact that bankers all over the United States have ordered the cheques, and are selling them in great numbers to the people, who are cashing them at hotels, railroad offices and shops, as well as at banks.

Thousands of bankers all over the United States have agreed to cash the cheques at par, and where due to special reasons it is impossible for them to do so in justice to themselves, they are to pay the face amount to the customer, and draw upon the trust company for the exchange. Cheques are being honored generally throughout the world where tourists require funds. It cannot be expected that strangers who have no interest either in the tourist or the system will cash association cheques any more readily than they would any travelers' cheques or other paper. Hotels in accepting travelers' cheques do so from parties who are stopping at their hotels, and who are, therefore, paying them for other services. Shop-keepers in accepting them do so against purchases, on which they have a profit. Railroad agents accept them in exchange for tickets, and bankers in this country honor them in a spirit of reciprocity, and foreign bankers because they are paid for so doing. Some people are constitutionally opposed to accommodating anyone, and would refuse to change a government bill just as readily as they might refuse to cash a travelers' cheque. Fortunately such people are few and far between, and holders of association cheques are meeting everywhere with great courtesy. One gentleman carrying the association cheques presented a cheque to a certain bank in New York, whose offices covered several floors. The floor upon which he chanced to enter was not the one on which the paying teller's window was located. The clerk to whom the cheque was presented referred the party to the next floor. He supposed this was another banking institution, and thought that his travelers' cheque had been refused by the first one approached. As soon as he was informed of his mistake, he was perfectly satisfied, and he is the only man who has advised the representative of the association that the cheques were not giving him complete satisfaction.

One party who went to a small town in Virginia presented one of the cheques to a hotel-keeper. The proprietor dug down into his pocket and pulled out the reduced fac-simile of the $20 denomination that had been sent to all hotel-keepers, compared it with the cheque presented to him for encashment, accepted it in payment of the customer's bill, and returned him the change. Hotel companies both in Europe and the United States have written that they were much pleased with the idea of having a uniform cheque used by bankers all over the United States, and feel that its general use will save them much friction and many losses that they have met with in the past through the encashment of miscellaneous exchange. Bankers are, therefore, urged to adopt the American Bankers Association travelers' cheques where they require such service, for while placing themselves in position to accommodate their customers in a dignified manner over their own name and at a proper profit, they will at the same time be protecting each other by placing in circulation paper that can be readily identified and that if genuine is always good.

Montclair Bank Has Freak Bill

The Montclair (N. J.) Savings Bank has a curio in the form of a $20 gold certificate, series of 1906, check letter B. The bill, which the bank officials say is undoubtedly genuine, has the yellow back printed in reverse order to the usual style. The strange bank note was accepted by Paying Teller Albert J. Clark, in a deposit of $500 made by one of the bank's customers. He discovered the oddity in counting over the money. The government officials make a careful inspection of all bills issued by the treasury department and when such mistakes are discovered the bill is canceled before receiving the treasurer's signature. This one not only escaped inspection undetected, but has been in circulation three years. The bank will hold the treasury certificate until it is passed on at Washington, and should it be declared a counterfeit the bank officials say it is one of the cleverest swindles ever perpetrated, as the printing and everything else is absolutely faultless.

E. R. Couden

E. R. Couden has resigned the cashiership of the First National Bank, of Corona, N. Y., to become the cashier of the Ridgewood National Bank, which is being organized and which will be located at Evergreen and Myrtle avenues, Brooklyn. Mr. Couden was for about ten years connected with the Market and Fulton Bank, of New York.

Minnesota's President at Lake Minnetonka

I congratulate the bankers of the state of Minnesota on the occasion of their twentieth annual convention upon the soundness of business conditions in the country at large. We have come through the dark night of panic and distress and are now passing from the dawn of recuperation into the full sunlight of confidence, prosperity, and what promises to be the period of greatest development of the section of the United States in which we live.

We are fortunate in having as chief executive of the nation a statesman who is sane, safe and sound, and throughout the country there has been a period of regeneration among state, municipal and town officials which is refreshing to our entire citizenship. Commercially in our own state we have especial reason for congratulation from the fact that our farmers have marketed their crops at extraordinarily high prices and that our business men have shared in this prosperity.

In statistics recently published in Washington, attention is called to the fact that of the 85,000,000 people who live in the United States, one-third live in the original thirteen states and another third in the states east of the Mississippi river, carved out of the original thirteen states, while in the balance of the country (largely to the west of the Mississippi river) are the remaining one-third. During the next twenty-five years the opportunities for making money for the young men are in the country west of the Mississippi river. It is here that we will see the greatest business activity and greatest development.

Banking conditions are sound and our banks well managed. As an organization we have grown, during the ten years I have served this association as an official, from a struggling group of one hundred and fifty banks into one of the strongest and most aggressive bankers associations in the United States, with a membership of eight hundred banking institutions. The deposits in banks in the state of Minnesota have grown in that period from $110,843,000 to state and national

$262,042,931.84, and that notwithstanding the fact that only 37 per cent of the tillable soil of our state is under cultivation. With our forests, our mines, our agricultural resources and our manufacturing industries, Minnesota promises to be one of the wealthiest, as well as one of the most important states in the Union, and the bankers should have much to do in shaping the destinies of this great commonwealth. Bankers associations such as ours are passing through a period of evolution, and if we wish to grasp the opportunity that is before us, we should, as an association, intelligently study and discuss matters which tend toward the development of the great state in which we live. The banker as an individual hardly recognizes the important place he holds in the community. He is the confidant of the widow, the orphan, the business man, the farmer, and the professional man. To men engaged in no other occupation do the people look to for guidance and advice in business ventures more than to the banker. This places a great responsibility upon the banker and makes it necessary that he be a man of broad intelligence, a man posted and up to date on all questions in which the people of his community or commonwealth are interested.

Bankers' organizations can exert a powerful influence on their communities by intelligently studying and discussing matters which affect the material as well as moral and ethical sides of life. I sincerely believe that if these great organizations are to continue to develop and grow and be of material benefit to the membership, to say nothing of the country, it will not be by discussing matters which pertain to the rate of exchange and interest charged, or similar minor matters connected with the banking business. That we, in Minnesota, are taking an interest in matters outside of the banking business or profession is evidenced by the nature of the program which is before you. You will note that we are to have an address on "The Development of the Mining and Transportation of the Iron Ore of the Lake Superior District" by the president of the Oliver Iron Mining Corporation, the greatest mining corporation in the world. It is time that the bankers of this state, as the trustees of the people's money, understood what Providence has endowed us with as a commonwealth in the immense ore deposits in the northern part of our state.

At the several group meetings which I had pleasure in attending, the greatest interest was manifested by the bankers present in the agricultural development of the state of Minnesota, and as a citizen of this state I want to publicly express my appreciation of the good work being done in educating our people along these lines by George Welch, our commissioner of immigration. In several groups, committees have been appointed to study this question, and at one of the meetings the convention went

North Carolina Welcomes the South Carolina Bankers

Col. Fries of Winston-Salem, combined an address upon postal banks with a welcome from the bankers of North Carolina to those of South Carolina, who had come over the borders for the purpose of holding their annual convention at the beautiful Wrightsville Beach. He said in part:

It seems particularly appropriate that North Carolina should throw wide her doors to the bankers from her sister state of South Carolina, and to welcome within her borders those who have been so closely allied to her by the bonds of sympathy and mutual interest since the earliest days of our national history. It is not too much to pledge to the bankers present our heartiest interest and best wishes for the success of this meeting and to you and the institutions you represent, great prosperity in the time that stretches ahead, in such glowing prospects, for many years to come.

It is very gratifying and I appreciate greatly the fact, that of the many able sons of the Old North State, you should have chosen me to address this association at this time and that you should have named a subject that is now so prominently before the people as "Postal Savings Banks."

The claim made by the postmaster-general in his report and the advocates of the measure, that the postal savings bank is needed to cultivate the habit of saving, does not appear to be borne out by these statistics, on the contrary, the habit seems to be already fixed and growing more rapidly here than elsewhere. Referring to the report of the comptroller we find that the increase in the number of savings banks was 40 per cent from 1887 to 1897, 55 per cent from 1897 to 1907 and the ratio in the last year has been 7.2 per cent, or for a like period of ten years 72 per cent. The increase in savings deposits in this country in 1906-1907 was about 7 per cent, while the increase in all other countries was 3.51 per cent, or only one-half as much as in the United States.

There is only one other point to be considered and this grows out of the statement or imputation that the banks are not safe in this country, and therefore the government should go into the business for the better protection of the people. In view of the amount that has been said on this subject, it will interest and may surprise some to know that the loss to savings bank depositors during 1906

COL. F. H. FRIES

was less than three ten-thousandths of one per cent. If the vast sum now deposited in the savings funds of the country was placed in the proverbial stocking or buried by the individual depositors, the total loss would undoubtedly be much greater than has actually occurred through bank failures. The people are not demanding the establishment of postal savings banks, it is the politicians who have put a postal savings bank plank into the platforms of the principal parties, with a view to attract the attention of the public, at a time when the panic of 1907 was still fresh in the minds of the people.

The people, who are the depositors, will gain nothing but lose much by such a measure, for the rate of interest which is now  $3\frac{1}{2}$  and 4 per cent will be reduced to 2 per cent, which difference applied to the total savings deposits of this country will represent to them a total loss per annum of \$60,980,300, an amount five hundred times the average annual loss now sustained through savings bank failures; to which should be added the cost of conducting the business which must also be borne by the people. The loss of \$60,000,000 annually to the people is not the only serious objection to the measure.

When the United States of America takes these deposits on demand from her citizens, she must expect to pay them back as any other debtor, this will be easy in times of peace and prosperity, but the burden becomes most serious in times of war, at such times the government will have, not only to provide for the means to carry on the war, but in addition will have to pay the money which its own people will demand.

There are grave defects in our laws affecting banks and our currency legislation is defective, these troubles have been emphasized by the recent panic in this country and already a monetary commission has been appointed by congress to study and report upon the subject. The able and patriotic statesmen composing this commission have been and are now diligently at work upon a bill, that will be designed to cure present defects and provide for future needs. Let us hope that it will provide for examinations and regulation, but not management and control, and that from their combined wisdom may come a measure that all parties, especially the bankers, can approve and support, that will disturb as little as possible existing conditions, that will provide ample and stable credit currency that can be used in time of panic, that will unify our banking system so that there can be concert of action, rather than defensive tactics in times of trouble and that will leave the general government free at all times to aid and assist the banking interest, so important to general business and commercial interests, and in no way enter the field as a competitor or the ally of one class of institutions to the detriment of others. Such a measure should and would, I feel sure, receive the hearty support of every banker and right minded citizen of this country.

ment, (who is the obligee on bonds amounting to the enormous sum of over $400,000,000) require surety companies to limit the risk they assume to 10 per cent of their capital and surplus, unless secured by collateral security, or by reinsurance in other solvent surety companies for the excess, I was heralded on many sides as a "calamity howler," etc., but from the time the insurance commissioners manifested interest, and from the time the secretary of the treasury issued the order that no company should execute a bond in excess of 10 per cent of its capital and surplus, without being so secured, the surety business of this country has been placed, and continues upon a conservative basis. It has been found necessary for the surety companies to co-operate with each other by way of reinsurance, which in itself is a great step in the right direction. There are a few executives of new surety companies who feel, notwithstanding what the other surety companies have suffered during the past twenty years, that they are able to guide satisfactorily the destiny of their own companies without co-operation, ignoring entirely the experience of the large majority of the companies, but it is confidently believed in time these companies will undergo the same destructive experience of the others, and will finally land their support in an effort to put the surety business upon a higher plane than it has ever heretofore occupied.

By reason of the business being new and untried, many mistakes were made by the companies as well as by the policy-holders. Many people regarded a surety bonds as an insurance policy, and when a surety company refused to recognize a claim much adverse criticism was leveled against the company, the latter frequently being condemned when it was clearly in the right. When a fire insurance company refuses to pay a claim and is sued, very little is said; likewise when accident insurance and casualty companies are sued, but when a life insurance company or a surety company contests a loss, by a strange method of reasoning on the part of the public, either of the last mentioned companies unfortunate enough to find itself in a position where it must be sued, is frequently and unreasonably condemned on all sides.

The enormous business transacted by this company in bonding employees of banking institutions, can be fairly estimated by the statement that in Missouri alone we are bonding the employees of over four hundred banks, this business being largely increased by the Missouri Bankers Association. We are also bonding thousands upon thousands of bank employees elsewhere in the United States, the natural result of which is the making of claims upon us by banks in goodly numbers, and it is with great pleasure I am able to make the statement that out of all of these cases this company has only three actions at law brought against it for the non-payment of claims made, our reasons for non-payment in each case being justified beyond any question.

I am also greatly pleased to state that this company has not a single contested bank burglary claim on its books. We have questioned but one such case, that being an instance where we were bonding the cashier of a bank which was also covered by our burglary insurance policy. It was believed there was no "hold-up" whatever; therefore we paid the claim under the fidelity bond covering the cashier.

The expense of operating a surety company is usually large. When the cashier or other employe of a bank or business house makes an application for a bond, the surety company requires that the application shall show when, where and how the applicant has been employed during the past ten years and in some instances longer; and also that he shall give the names of five references who have not therefore been employers of the applicant. All employers and references are then written to, the average number, I should say, being about five each, therefore there are sent out directly, ten letters asking for information; in many instances replies are so badly delayed by the referees that the surety company is obliged to send out a second, and in some instances a third and fourth request, before it is able to get the information. In each case a return stamped envelope accompanies the request, thus you will see that the item of postage alone is a factor, which, coupled with the time of the officers and employees of the companies, costs the surety company, it is believed, an average of about $1 to $1.50 for making an investigation by correspondence alone. Then, frequently information of a doubtful nature will be received by the company, necessitating that the company send its inspectors personally to make an investigation, all of which entails considerable additional expense that is not known to the public or to the employer. All of the personal inspection work done by a surety company's representatives, after bonds have been executed, requires the expenditure of a very large sum of money annually.

As a rule, surety companies make their money (outside of their investments) not out of premiums as received, but by taking down what is known as the "premium reserve" after they have carried the risk to maturity.

The laws of practically every state in the United States require that a surety company shall, in its financial statement, debit itself with a "premium reserve" of 50 per cent of its annual premium receipts, the other 50 per cent being used in management expenses, part of which I have herein referred to. When the company is released from liability by reason of termination of the bond (usually at the end of the term of the bond or policy) it may then deduct from its "premium reserve" the 50 per cent of unearned premium, which it is entitled to credit to its surplus account.

During my experience in the surety business I have been in intimate touch with particulars regarding the career of defaulters and embezzlers "before and after." During all that time, covering hundreds and hundreds of cases, I have never known of a single instance where a man who embezzled funds from his employer ultimately profited by reason of his dishonest transaction. The money thus acquired has either been gambled away by cards, horses, boards of trade, bucket shops, or in some other vicious manner, and the defaulter is ostracized and isolated from his people, whether he has gone to some other country or not. Therefore, I can unhesitatingly say to all young men, viewing it from a strict dollar and cent standpoint, that it pays, absolutely pays in the long run, to be honest.

As a matter of fact, the losses under bank employees' bonds sustained by surety companies under bank or other employees' bonds are not so much due, primarily, to the malicious dishonesty of employees, but on the contrary, to the absence of an effective system of accounting on the part of the bank; in other words, it is due to too much freedom of action being accorded the employee—too much opportunity. As far as possible bankers should make it impossible for their employees to embezzle money. They owe it to their employees, because it is "opportunity that makes the thief." Without opportunity no man can be a defaulter, therefore minimize the opportunity as far as possible. Out of thousands of cases of defaults and embezzlements it has been my observation that not one man in a hundred embezzles funds with the deliberate purpose of defrauding his employer. It is almost the invariable rule that the money is taken with an apparent honest intention of returning it to the employer, it being taken in a spirit of a temporary loan, some exigency of a serious nature having arisen. It is the first step that is fatal in almost every case where money is so misappropriated, for the reason that the judgment of the employee is sadly impaired on account of the pressure being brought to bear upon him for some reason or another, and in the absence of a great strength of character he is unable to withstand the temptation, and yields, almost always with the firm resolution that he will "make good" and never do it again; but he is unable to "make good," and thus another false entry is necessary, and he usually goes on and on, until finally discovery is unavoidable, then he becomes an absconder or seeks relief by self-destruction, unless apprehended and goes to prison.

The surety company is a great moral factor. During my experience I have known of several instances where a surety company having learned that a bank employee had started on a downward path, arrested his descent by quick action, warning the employee to start afresh, and I am proud to say that in two or three cases I now have in mind, which came under my personal observation, young men who were warned by the surety company before they had gone too far are now occupying very responsible positions with large banking houses of this country with great credit to themselves and their employers. This is work done by surety companies which costs considerable money, and of which the large banker or other employer frequently has no knowledge, and for which the surety company gets no credit. I have known of instances where there have been heavy defalcations, and too frequently the bond covers only a fraction of the loss, and the president or some other officer of the bank wrote a confidential letter to the officials of the surety company outlining the situation, with the result that the surety company forthwith put funds covering its liability into the possession of the bank, and if such action had not been taken by the surety company serious results may have followed, and in some cases, in all probability, the doors would have been closed. In one recent case a defalcation was discovered in a bank whose employees we were bonding. The president of the bank telegraphed me personally from another city, explaining the situation, regarding the defaulter's conduct, asking that he be authorized to draw upon us for the amount of his claim in order that he might have funds and publicly state that the loss had already been made good, otherwise he feared a "run," and the consequent closing of his bank. I immediately wired the desired authority and thus saved the bank, which is being profitably operated to-day, but very few knew the important part played by the surety company.

After a company executes a bond and a loss is discovered the surety company must be instantly advised. When this is done, usually the entire matter is turned over to the surety company to pay the loss, locate the defaulter, and have him arrested for the crime with which he is charged. In many instances the expense of apprehending defaulters greatly exceeds the amount of the loss. I know of many cases where it has been found necessary for us to locate defaulters in foreign countries, where the expense of apprehension was largely in excess of the amount of the defalcation. None of these elements are taken into consideration by the average employer who desires security covering the fidelity of his employees—he can see only the premium paid and the losses sustained; therefore, in many instances, companies appear to be making money on a given line of business when the premiums received and the losses paid are put side by side, but when the expenses are included the amount shows up very unfavorably for the surety company.

The average employer has not the slightest conception of the vast records necessary to be kept by a surety company doing a large business throughout the country, similar to that done by the "National." It will probably surprise my hearers and the readers of this address to know that my own company alone is required to rent almost an entire building in the city of New York, wherein to store its records of the lives of approximately one million men, so that whenever any one of these on record in asking that the state association appoint a committee, to be known as the committee on the agricultural development of Minnesota. The fact that a larger percentage of people in the United States are living in the cities and towns than are found in the rural communities is one worthy of serious consideration and study by such an organization as the Minnesota Bankers Association. It is to you gentlemen largely that the father of the young man living in the country comes to for advice as to what school or college the boy is to attend, or what profession he should follow, and it is your duty to be so advised and posted regarding conditions in the cities that you can intelligently advise that father whether it is to the boy's interest to leave a farming community, where the chances are that in five or ten years he can own a farm and be worth from $10,000 to $50,000 by intelligently farming the land, or whether he should go to the great cities and become the future motorman and street car conductor.

The future of any nation depends largely upon the training and instruction received by the youth. The fact has been called to my attention, and I now wish to impress it upon your minds, that the common school system of the state of Minnesota does nothing to encourage any boy or young man to remain on the farm. The subject of agriculture is absolutely ignored. The papers are full of the success of such men as Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Carnegie, Mr. Hill, Mr. Rogers, and the impression is conveyed to the boy in the country school that it is only the failures who remain on the farm; that the boy of brains must go to the city to make his future. I do not want to be understood as saying that no country boys should come to the cities, but I do think it is time that they should be advised that it is only the very small percentage of young men who can climb to the top of the ladder in our great cities, while it is a fact that every young man of capacity and industry can amass a competency on the farms.

I claim that there is no body of citizens in our state better organized, both by training and profession, to gather facts concerning these conditions and to so intelligently mold public opinion on these questions as are the bankers.

Having tried to show that by reason of the positions we occupy, we owe a debt to the people which is not easily discharged, I make the statement here that it is largely the fault of the bankers themselves that we have the agitation for postal savings banks and government guaranty of deposits. In two of the greatest states in this Union, led by a few selfish, narrow-minded men, the bankers have absolutely obstructed any legislation tending towards the proper control and supervision of the banking business. Such an attitude is not only unwise, but it brings the entire profession into disrepute, and it is a subject of special congratulation that the bankers of this state were leaders in recommending and in having such laws placed upon our statute books that the people of this state are safeguarded in every possible way against the operations of dishonest and speculative men who sometimes break into the banking business. I know of no state anywhere where the citizens have greater confidence in their banking institutions than they have in Minnesota, and the frankness and willingness of the bankers to do everything possible to safeguard the people's money is largely responsible for this feeling.

I refer with regret at this time to the death of two of the former officers of this association—A. C. Anderson, who served us as president, and was for many years a member of our executive council; and E. C. Brown, our former secretary. Both were enthusiastic in their efforts to build up this great association and we have met with a distinct loss in the death of these two loyal men.

One, two, four and six cylinders — relative stages of progress in the perfection of the automobile.

Tallow candles gave light. Coal oil lamps more light. Gas still more light. And electricity surpasses them all, giving most light and avoiding all the inconveniences and all the unsanitary conditions of candles, oil and gas.

One-cylinder cars were a success. Twos were better. Fours still better. But it remained for six-cylinder cars to surpass them all, overcoming all their faults and giving to the automobile a new and probably an ultimate perfection.

This perfection commands every phase of motoring — Quietness, Sweet running, Comfort to passengers, Slow work on high in congested quarters, Range of speed on high without gear-shifting, Ability to take hills on high where fours drop back to second and first, Economy of operation, and Longevity of car; and gives the Six owner the satisfaction of knowing that his car represents the utmost achievement in automobile designing and manufacturing.

These points of superiority should characterize every six-cylinder car on the market. They do characterize the

Every man who recognizes the superiority of electric lighting over candles, oil and gas, will quite as readily recognize the superiority of the Winton Six over other types when he rides in this car.

George E. Roberts on Postal Savings Banks

President Roberts, of the Commercial National, Chicago, had a very attentive audience at the Minnesota convention to hear what he had to say on postal savings banks. He made a splendid effort and said in part, as follows:

The postal savings bank plan comes to us from Europe. The most common and perhaps most influential argument in its favor, is that nearly all other countries have one, and yet the conditions are radically different in this country from the conditions abroad. Abroad, the postal deposits are all invested in public debt; in fact, the postal savings system in those countries is a part of the machinery by which the governments float their loans. In this country the public debt is small, our bonds yield less than 2 per cent to investors, they are all employed as the basis of our currency system and are wholly unavailable as a means of employing these deposits.

I venture the opinion that a majority of the people who favor a postal savings bank never get so far as to consider how the funds are to be employed. The idea of having the government receive deposits at the postoffice, furnishing convenient and absolutely safe depositories, is attractive to them. But that is only one-half of the banking function. It is just as important that these deposits shall be returned to circulation in the localities where they belong as it is that there shall be safe and convenient depositories, and this second half of the banking function the government has no facilities for performing. That is the fundamental weakness of the scheme.

Even if the public debt was available for the employment of the funds, we would not want the savings of all the scattered localities of this country gathered up and sent to Washington for investment.

Now, if the drain of savings deposits from all parts of a country to the capital for investment in government or other high class bonds, is a serious matter in a country like England, it would be very much more so in a country like the United States. England is a comparatively small country, no part of it is new, and all of it is very well supplied with capital. The contrary is true of the United States; it would be nothing less than an economic crime to take the savings of states like the Dakotas,

Lake Minnetonka Convention

Oklahoma, Texas, Minnesota, or any of the Western states, down to Washington for investment either in government bonds or any other securities of that class. It would result in a further congestion of money in the centers. In a country of vast undeveloped resources like the United States, it is of the highest importance that the savings of every section shall be allowed to remain where they are earned, as a part of the working capital of the region, for the development of that locality, and for the employment of the wage-earners who are usually the depositors. The deposits are of more value to the country there than they can be anywhere else, and they earn a much larger return for the depositors there than they can anywhere else.

GEORGE E. ROBERTS

This is the primary and economic argument against the postal savings bank. It has always been recognized as conclusive against any plan which would remove the deposits from the locality where they belong. Postmaster-General Meyer last year, in bringing forward the project again, recognized the validity of this objection and undertook to meet it by proposing to re-deposit these savings in the national banks of the same locality, at a slightly advanced rate of interest. This is the proposition embodied in the Carter bill, which was favorably reported by a senate committee at the last session. Its provisions amount to a frank confession that the government has no facilities for the investment of deposits, and proposes a combination by which the government shall collect the deposits and be responsible for them, and then turn them over to the national banks for investment. The Carter bill proposes to make them a preferred debt, and the government's claim on their account a first lien on the assets of national banks.

It is urged, however, that the postal savings bank would attract a class of patrons that now do not use banks at all, and bring into use a large sum of money now hoarded and idle. The most surprising estimates of this sort are offered. A United States senator who has been active in support of the postal savings bank measure made an address before the Baltimore Chapter of the American Institute of Banking recently, in which he said that the whereabouts of 49 per cent of the country's total stock of money could not be ascertained, carrying the idea that all the money not in sight on a given day, either in the banks or in the national treasury, was hoarded. Of course a large amount of money is in use on every business day, outside of banks and the treasury, in safes and tills and pockets. Nobody knows how much is so required, and any estimate as to the amount that is hoarded is a pure guess.

But admitting that there is some fear of banks and some hoarding in consequence, this condition is due to the admitted defects that have existed in our banking and currency systems. Confidence in our banking institutions has grown steadily as improved methods have furnished a basis for it. The most remarkable feature of the panic of 1907 was the degree of confidence generally displayed by bank patrons under conditions calculated to create alarm.

It was in fact a bankers' rather than a depositors' panic. It is then the part of wisdom to treat the fear of banks as an important permanent condition, and cater to it by providing a permanent system which will always be uneconomical, always a burden to the government, and always involve loss to its patrons, or had we better face our banking problems squarely and endeavor to perfect our system and surround the banking business generally with such safeguards as will establish it in the confidence of the public?

The theory advanced by Postmaster-General Meyer that there are many localities not provided with postal savings bank facilities is not supported by observation. He was evidently misled by the statistics as to savings banks which appear in the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency, and which include no banks but those which call themselves savings banks. For instance, these tables report only two savings banks in the state of Wisconsin, with deposits aggregating $1,085,014. The Postmaster-General's argument was based upon the assumption that excepting those two banks there were no institutions in the state that would receive savings deposits. The state of Minnesota is reported as having only fourteen savings banks, and the state of Indiana as having but five. In the same way the states of Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Georgia, Idaho, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington and Wyoming are represented as being without any savings bank facilities, while in fact all of these states have banks in every small town that receive savings deposits and pay a higher rate of interest on them than the postal bank proposes to pay. It is a total misconception of the situation to suppose that any important section of this country is lacking in banks with which small depositors may do business.

Finally, I am disposed, myself, to hold that strictly savings deposits, that is to say, deposits not subject to check, should be safeguarded with special care, segregated from commercial deposits, protected from commercial risks, and invested under special regulations. So handled they will yield much better results to the depositors than they can in a postal bank, and be much more serviceable to the country.

In conclusion, every effort should be made to prevent hasty action, by congress or state legislatures, until the currency commission now deliberating upon our banking and currency problems shall have had time to make its report. A recognized fault in all our legislation upon banking and currency in the past has been its makeshift character. Our system has been a piece of patchwork. At last we have an opportunity to obtain a comprehensive and consistent system. The commission of eighteen members, nine from the senate and nine from the house, is making the most thorough study of the subject ever undertaken by any official body in this country, and it should have the field to itself until its work is done.

The United States National Bank

The Bank of Ashland, established 25 years ago, at Ashland, Ore., has been converted to a national and will hereafter be known as the United States National Bank. There will be no change in officials or in the ownership of the stock. D. R. Mills is president, E. V. Carter, cashier.

Montana Banking Good

David Hilger, president of the First National Bank and W. J. Johnson, cashier, Lewiston, Montana, spent several days in Chicago this week. Mr. Johnson states that banking conditions in Montana are in splendid shape. The demand for money is strong and interest rates satisfactory. The completion of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company to Seattle through Montana and the impetus given to immigration through this influence, is taking thousands of Europeans of the peasant class into the important agricultural and wool growing sections of Montana.

Taft Plans South American Bank

Washington, D. C., June 15.—President Taft is seeking to create in the United States what will be known as a "South American Bank." The object of this institution will be to establish branches in the various countries of Central and South America, arrange loans for governments of the republic, and for the inauguration of private enterprises and, in general, to promote American interests and trade.

H. C. Ford

H. Calvin Ford, a Boston boy who travels for the National Copper Bank, New York City, visited Chicago Saturday and Sunday. Mr. Ford is headed for the Pacific Coast and made an agreeable impression on Chicago bankers, with whom he visited. For a two year old bank the National Copper has grown some, having deposits of about $35,000,000. Their cashier, W. F. Albertsen, formerly of Pekin, Illinois, was appointed bank examiner during the administration of C. G. Dawes, Comptroller of Currency, and assigned to the New York district, where he made a splendid record for efficiency, and when the National Copper bank was organized he was their first choice for cashier.

The Kingston State Bank is the title of a new enterprise at Kingston, Wis. Capitalized at $15,000. E. Dixon, Edmund Vaughn and Joseph T. Shaw are interested.

Des Moines, June 16.—Des Moines bankers are unanimous in the opinion that the state convention of the Iowa Bankers Association at Waterloo last week was the most successful ever held. Of course they say next years will be more successful yet because it will be held in Des Moines, but whether that is true will be determined later. Waterloo is always a good town for the stranger, and bankers at the convention were made to feel at home upon their arrival.

The election of J. D. Easton, of Waterloo, as president was not unexpected. L. E. Stevens, of Ottumwa, was made vice-president; J. M. Dinwiddie of Cedar Rapids, secretary, and I. M. Sproull of Washington, treasurer.

One important action taken was that of making the office of secretary a permanent affair, electing thereto a man who shall devote his entire time to the association and who shall have headquarters in Des Moines. This secretary will be chosen at the next convention when it meets in Des Moines next year. The resolutions as passed endorsed the action of mercantile associations toward protection in the payment of drafts only when it is thoroughly identified particularly as applied to bills of lading, drafts, and recommending the system of traveler's checks, devised by the American Bankers Association. It was also recommended that five bankers be named to take action towards securing proper legislation for the regulation of trust companies. Legislation on currency reform, postal banks, etc., was deplored until the monetary commission reports. There was considerable disappointment expressed because Governor B. F. Carroll was prevented by illness from appearing on the program. His able paper was read by J. D. Whisenand of the Central State of Des Moines.

Iowa Banks Grow in Wealth

Iowa banks continue to grow in wealth. The report of the state banking department compiled from reports filed following the call for May 18th, show that in the past year deposits have increased $27,227,860.72. Nine new banks have been added to Iowa's bank population since the previous report in February. The number of new banks in the past year are 51. The average reserve is 20 per cent. The comparison with the February report shows bills receivable, increase $11,679,846.95; gold coin, increase $106,420.24; silver coin, increase, $6,130.96; legal tender, increase, $213,435.04; credits subject to sight draft, decrease, $7,757,271.94; overdrafts, decrease, $501,491.08; real and personal property, increase, $404,201.70; total assets increase, $3,724,401.21; liabilities, capital stock, increase, $542,000; due depositors, increase, $1,986,635.27; due banks and others, increase, $102,439.86; surplus, increase, $240,849.72; undivided profits, increase, $852,476.36; total liabilities, increase, $3,724,401.21.

School Bank a Success

The school bank at Stratford, which has attracted wide-spread interest, was so successful that it has been decided to continue it and when school reopens next fall, the bank will start in with renewed activity. Miss Clarice Swedlund has been elected cashier during the summer months. The bank operated on 64 school days, it had 66 depositors and the amount on deposit was $250.59. This money was actually earned, and as Stratford is a town of only 600 people, the showing made is very satisfactory. It is planned to loan this money when school reopens under direction of the school board.

Prize Offer Improves Roads

The offering of prizes by the Anamosa National for good road building is having a noticeable effect upon the roads about Anamosa which have improved wonderfully. The bank is naturally enough receiving not only deserved credit but good advertising as well. Farmers have banded together in districts around Anamosa so that they may secure some of the prizes. About forty miles of roads leading into Anamosa have been dragged, graded, and otherwise benefited as the direct result of the bank's proposition.

Names Waterway Improvement Commission

Governor B. F. Carroll last week named the first drainage and waterway improvement commission that Iowa ever had under the terms of the statute to that end enacted by the recent legislature. On the commission are two leading Iowa bankers, Al Miller of the Home Savings, Des Moines, is chairman, banker Keerl of Mason City is the second. The commission is named to investigate Iowa waterways with a view to improving and otherwise utilizing their power.

Grants Retrial

Judge Smith McPherson in federal court at Davenport has made an important decision in the case of the Princeton Savings vs. the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company in granting a retrial of the case in which the defendant was given the verdict when Receiver Gruenwald sought to hold the bond company for the loss sustained by the creditors when the bank was closed. The amount involved is about $7,000. The granting of a new trial gives the bank another chance at the bond company. The new trial will occur at the next term of federal court.

Friends of J. G. Rounds Anxious

Some little apprehension is felt among friends of President J. G. Rounds of the Citizens National, of Des Moines, who has been very ill with typhoid fever. Although he has been in bed for more than a week at the time of writing, he was no better, and in fact his condition has failed to improve from day to day.

Changes Among National Bank Officials

Several changes in national bank officers in Iowa are reported. These are as follows: First National Bank of La Porte City, C. E. Ashland, president in place of J. H. Sunemann; Monroe National, F. B. Kingdon, cashier in place of Charles E. Schenck, A. G. Warner, assistant cashier in place of F. B. Kingdon; First National of Rock Valley, Frank A. Large, cashier in place of John J. Large, appointed examiner, and Delko Bloen assistant cashier in place of J. A. Huizenga.

Surety and Burglary Insurance by an Expert

men apply for a bond in any part of this or any other country, now or any time in the future, we may with facility look up the record and promptly give our decision as to whether or not the applicant is eligible for our guaranty.

It is my honest conviction that no banking institution should fail to bond its employees in a reliable surety company, because of the restraining influence a corporate bond has upon the average employee. I regard it a duty the employer owes to the employees as well as to the stockholders. I remember very well about twenty-three years ago when I made my first application to a surety company for a bond in the sum of $500, protecting the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Company of Minneapolis against any loss by reason of dishonesty on my part. Many mornings before I had definite assurance from my employer that my bond would be issued, I tremblingly opened my letters, daily expecting to be advised that for some reason or another my bond had been declined, although as a matter of fact no young man I know of had more reason than I to expect his bond would be issued, and if later I had ever been inclined to do anything whatever that would have justified the cancellation of my bond, the restraining influence put upon me by making that application, absolutely annihilated the inclination, and therefore, my personal experience, together with that of hundreds and hundreds of employees in this country, warrants the statement that every banker and other employer should demand that every employee make application for a bond to a responsible surety company, even though the amount be only $500. The benefits derived from the "moral effect" and the restraining influence alone are more than enough to justify the expenditure of the small premium now charged by surety companies. And let me say here that because one company offers a cheaper rate than another, a banker is not always justified in placing the business in the cheapest company, for when a loss is sustained it is necessary to call upon the surety company to respond financially, and the cheapest is frequently not the best. In the case of default, you occupy very much the same relation to the surety company that a depository occupies to a closed bank—the money is wanted—then the best is none too good.

I trust that it is entirely proper for me to make a few recommendations at this time:

First—Bankers should systematically arrange that employees be required to take vacations.

Second—Employees should frequently be transferred, temporarily at least, from one position to another. Shortages are most frequently discovered when defaulters are absent from their desks by vacations, sickness or when transferred.

Third—Personally verify balances with your correspondents as far as possible.

Fourth—Avoid having receiving tellers balance pass books.

Fifth—Require collection clerks to time stamp letters accompanying remittances, and invariably supersede them for at least two weeks annually.

Sixth—If any customer has the privilege of depositing late, for instance railroads, etc., require that your system shall prevent an employee taking credit for such deposit without charging his cash therewith.

Seventh—Pay your employees a fair salary for their services. Many defaulters are made by insufficient compensation.

The subject of depository bonds covering the security of public money is a live one in banking circles these days, as well as in surety circles. It is especially alive in the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska, where the states have passed laws for the insurance of bank deposits. During the stringency of 1907, the surety companies had brought home to them the importance of keeping down their lines on risks contemplating the guaranteeing of bank deposits. I shall never forget my own experience of being called upon to pay over $300,000, because of the closing of the doors within a few days of several New York banks where the National Surety Company was on the bonds, at a time when almost

I believe that the time is approaching when the thumb print signature will be used by all banks, and it will prove a positive preventative of forgeries."

The last check presented was of the $1 denomination. The holder found it a few days ago. The clearing house association will take care of the others on presentation.

Bank clearings in Spokane for the week ended June 3d amounted to $5,996,711, as against $4,597,602, for the same period a year ago, an increase of 30 per cent. These are for five days' clearings, as May 31st was a holiday. The clearings for the week last year are also for a holiday week.

John M. Campbell, vice-president of the Spokane Title Company, said on returning from a trip through the Palouse wheat belt that the crop outlook is the best in the history of the district south of Spokane and it is believed high prices will rule.

The Manual of Statistics

The 1909 edition of The Manual of Statistics has just appeared, being the thirty-first annual issue of that useful standard publication. The past year has been productive of many changes in corporate affairs in the United States and Canada, as well as in the financial position of different railroad and industrial organizations. The 1094 pages of this handsome and compact but carefully compiled reference volume present a greater fund of information for the use of investors and speculators than can be obtained in any other work of its class. At the same time it covers ample information regarding government securities, mining stocks and the grain and cotton statistics. Its utility is further enhanced by an arrangement rendering references to the contents of any section easy and satisfactory. The present edition also devotes much attention to the newer industrial and mining companies, and gives the many changes in dividend payments which have occurred down to the date of its issue. It gives throughout evidence of accuracy and careful compilation, and is brought down to date in its descriptive and statistical details, making the volume one which investors and all who are interested in the financial and other markets of the country cannot afford to be without. It is published by The Manual of Statistics Company, 20 Vesey Street, New York. Price, $5.

The Farmers and Merchants' State Bank will be started at Decker, Ind., about July 1st. D. N. Lane is president; Frank Plass, vice-president and J. M. Bailey, cashier.

"The Mystery of Miss Motte"

The mystery story ever will be with us in some form, but not always in the graceful structure reared by Caroline Atwater Mason, in "The Mystery of Miss Motte." Miss Motte comes into the story as the co-worker with a fashionable church minister, who declares his love in the first chapter, not for the church, but for his astonished and shocked assistant. It is a love story, with mixed human emotions, but with a clear, harmonious motive which ends properly enough.

Published by L. C. Page & Company, Boston, Mass.

Perry Triplicate Telegram Blanks

An Illinois bank paid out $50 last week on a fake telegraphic money order, waiving identification. They should have wired for verification. Most banks take triplicate copies of all such and of other important messages, and verification costs so little that it is pure negligence not to require it. Banks not equipped with the proper triplicate blanks should write to the Perry Book & Bindery Co., First National Bank building, Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. The inventor and maker is a practical banker and knows what you will require.

The Idle Rich of New York

One may get a view of high life in New York's gilded circles in Florence Halsey's new book, "Fate and the Butterfly." The author's familiarity with the life and indulgences of the idle rich of the metropolis cannot be denied. The tale is the painful story of a painfully innocent young girl married to a morphine fiend. It tells of her suffering and of her "consolation" by an "old friend" in a truly tobogganistic fashion.

Published by B. W. Dodge & Co., New York, at $1.50.

A Six That Is a Six

The Winton car is driven by more bankers, in Chicago, than any other make. True of most cities and towns. A banker will not buy except from an "established" concern, financially responsible, able to keep their promises, whose guaranty is good. He may not believe in guaranty of deposits, but with automobiles it's different. The entire output of 60-horse power sixes has been sold this year already and but few more of the smaller sixes can be turned out. Great record.

of reserve against the deposits of those banks and as security for bank notes secured in full by gold.

Under existing conditions the reserves carried by the national banks in these three central reserve cities are locked up in their vaults and do no good beyond that, and, indeed, their safe keeping is a burden to the banks themselves.

Since it has been proven by experience that the central banks of the three countries heretofore mentioned, carry practically all of the reserves of those countries, there is no reason that I know of why our banks in New York, Chicago and St. Louis should not keep the bulk of their reserve in a central bank, carrying in their own vaults only "till money," in such amounts as would be necessary to meet their daily needs.

You will note that this plan would not in any wise change existing laws regarding bank reserves in any way, except in the three central reserve cities; consequently, it would not disturb the present relation between banks in the interior and their reserve correspondents.

I would provide for the supervision of this bank along lines somewhat similar to those governing the Imperial Bank of Germany, or the Reichbank, by the appointment of a general governmental supervising or overseeing board, the members of which should be appointed jointly by the president of the United States, the secretary of the treasury and the comptroller of currency.

I would have another board selected by the stockholders, the members of which would confer with the officers and this supervising board, but in order that the management of the bank might be removed from politics I would have the supervising board, after they had conferred with the board representing the stockholders appoint the directors and president of the bank to their respective positions or life, subject to removal, however, by that board in the event that they should not discharge their duties properly in accordance with the law regulating the management of the bank.

I would make this bank a bank of discount for the bankers of America: In a word, while

I would popularize it by making it a people's bank and, so far as the public is concerned, allow the bankers to have nothing to do with its ownership or management, still, I would, in the law creating it, provide for all of the needs of the banking and other business interests of the country.

My opinion is that what we need in this country now is greater discount facilities in times of stress quite as badly as we need more real money, and the fact that our panics are so severe when they do occur is, in a measure, I think, because any uneasiness on the part of the public forces the banks, as a measure of self-preservation, to discontinue extending discount accommodations and causes them to immediately undertake to increase their reserves, through contracting their lines of discount and otherwise, to do which under our present system it is necessary to deplete the reserves of someone else.

While I would make this bank a bank of discount, I would not, for the present at least, and possibly never, allow it to receive deposits other than as I have already stated, viz.: from the government and the banks in the three central reserve cities.

I can conceive how this bank would have a great credit-creating power which would enable it in times of stress or emergency to extend to the banks of the country discount accommodations to the extent of a billion dollars or more, or an amount in my opinion sufficient to restore confidence and order in business.

I would have the law providing for its organization describe very specifically the kind of paper that would be admissible for discount by the bank; and in order that the credit which its discounting of paper would create should be used in legitimate lines of business and not for speculative purposes, I would confine its discounts to short-time commercial paper originating in actual business transactions, and would not allow it to accept loans with stocks, bonds or other speculative securities as collateral. In this way it would be made impossible for the central bank to give any direct assistance to any business of a speculative character.

A central bank given this power would have to have the right to make commercial credits the basis of part security, at least, for its circulating notes, but this could be done and still enable the bank, under practically all emergencies, to maintain against its bank notes a sufficiently large percentage of reserve, in gold and silver, to insure the safety of the note and the stability of its credit with the people of this and other countries.

In framing a law providing for the creation of a central bank of this character I would not interfere with the present note-issuing power of the national banks of the country, but I would have in mind giving to the central bank the ultimate exclusive right of issue of bank notes when our outstanding government bonds are retired and the present basis of security for our national bank notes no longer exists. In that way, the central bank would gradually through a period of years assume greater functions in this direction, but it would be many years before our present bond-secured bank notes would disappear.

So far as I know, the currency commission has not as yet undertaken to formulate any definite plan, and I have no idea what its recommendations will be.

I have given you this very brief and somewhat incomplete outline of this plan simply for the purpose of enabling you to make a study of the question from possibly another point of view, but I have no desire whatever to commit you to the plan, as I assure you I, myself, am entirely openminded, so far as the whole subject is concerned, and will ultimately take pleasure in supporting the plan which, of all the plans suggested, bids fair to bring the greatest good for the greatest number.

I would suggest that you familiarize yourselves with the subject as much as possible, by studying the question, but I urge you to withhold your decision regarding all plans proposed until after the recommendations of the national currency commission are known to you, when I hope you will carefully study that report without prejudice, beyond which I can ask from you only such co-operation as may be dictated by your honest judgment.

A new bank is to be organized at Mount Calvary, Wis. B. Bittner, Herbert Weingardt, Jos. Helz, Andrew Vogel, Anton Keuler and Henry Holzmann are promoters.

BOND houses are waking up to the fact that the small country bankers have money to spend for good investments. The increased attendance of bond men at the recent group meetings and the activity they displayed trying to hook on to some of this business was commented upon.

THE First National of Joliet, had a house warming Friday night in the new bank building and ran a special car from Chicago. There was a dinner with speeches and George Woodruff appeared in three complete changes of costume to great applause. The new banking room is a dream.

COUNTRY banks are still showing their wonted reluctance to take up any paper under 4 per cent, and continue to be conspicuous for their absence from the market, but the demand from the city banks is still in excess of the supply, some of the commercial paper houses reporting smaller supplies on hand than they have known to be the case in the last ten or twelve years.

ONE of the features of the Ohio convention at Toledo, this week, was the introduction by J. W. Woods, of Lebanon, and S. D. Fitton, of Hamilton, of a resolution placing the Ohio Bankers Association on record as opposed to competitive bidding for the public funds of the state of Ohio. The resolution declares that the competitive bidding system is unfair and will pledge the Bankers Association to work for a flat banking rate with an equal distribution of the state funds to all banks in the state that qualify.

THE presence of Pittsburgh banks this week at the doors of the Chicago houses in search of commercial paper, something which has not occurred before in years, is one of the latest developments of a money market which is beginning to assume, according to some brokers, an easier aspect than has been reached before this spring.

Banks Consolidate

Two of Chicago's most powerful and famous banks have agreed to work together in the future, and thus have advanced the financial center of Chicago by adding another star of the first magnitude to her financial firmament. The merging banks are the Continental National and the American Trust and Savings Bank. Neither bank will lose its identity but rather will increase it, the Continental taking a more important position in commercial banking and the American Trust will be able to enlarge its functions as a trust company, state and savings bank. Each had reached a point where it felt the need of a wider field for related business. The Continental produces a great amount of trust and bond business, and the American Trust has had need for a strictly commercial department. No outside comment could so clearly state the matter as the following joint statement sent to THE CHICAGO BANKER:

"The management of the Continental National Bank and that of the American Trust and Savings Bank have agreed upon a plan by which a unity of their stock and interests will be consummated.

"For a considerable time the Continental National has had under consideration the formation of a trust and savings bank in conjunction with its business, and during the same time the American Trust has considered the formation of a national bank in co-operation with its business. To avoid forming two new institutions, one national and the other state, the Continental National and the American Trust have agreed to consolidate and unify their interests. In that way the two institutions will be provided with the additional banking facilities which their respective national and state charters would otherwise not authorize.

"The Continental National has also had in contemplation the construction of a new building. The plan now completed will obviate that necessity. The Continental National will, conjointly with the American Trust, occupy the recently constructed American Trust Building.

"Under the arrangement entered into, the Continental National and the American Trust will each retain its name, corporate existence and business. The capital stock of the Continental National will be increased from $4,000,000 to $9,000,000. Of the new issue of $5,000,000, $2,000,000 will be allotted to the present stockholders of the Continental National, and will be sold to them on a basis that will equalize the book value of the stock of both banks. The remaining $3,000,000 will be exchanged, share for share, for the present $3,000,000 capital stock of the American Trust and Savings Bank. In this way all of the stock of the American Trust will be trusted for the benefit of all of the stockholders of the Continental National, and each American Trust stockholder will become the owner of an amount of Continental National stock equal to his present holding of American Trust stock. The capital stock and surplus of the two banks will be about $16,500,000.

"The board of the Continental National will be enlarged and the personnel of the boards of both banks will be the same. George M. Reynolds will continue to be the president of the Continental National, and Edwin A. Potter will continue to be the president of the American Trust, and each will become the first vice-president of the other bank. The other officials and the staff of the two banks will continue. The management of the two banks believes that the practical consolidation thus effected will greatly extend their banking facilities, the volume and classes of their business and the resultant profits.

"GEORGE M. REYNOLDS,
President Continental National Bank.

"EDWIN A. POTTER,
President American Trust and Savings Bank."

Many bankers and business men of Chicago, in interviews in the daily press commended the step as proof of the growth of Chicago in financial importance. The new combination will have a capital of $9,000,000; surplus $7,500,000; deposits, $115,000,000, and will rank in the very first, elect circle of important banks, in the larger than local sense. The officers will remain as at present.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

A RICHLY clad gentleman of education, high lineage and winning ways, hailing from Pittsburgh, has been mingling with ministers and bankers in and about Chicago for some time devoting his time outside of social duties to exchanging small checks for cash. He "put one over" on John Fletcher, but for once John was in purely select company, the other victims being ministers of the gospel.

THE stranger is on Chicago's club list, is the son of a bishop of the church, and for several days did well. It was a gentleman of the cloth, and not of the bank, who tripped him up until the officers came.

SOCIETY item. The Hon. Abner Smith, ex-president of the late Bank of America, is passing the heated term at a large health resort at Joliet. It is said that he is particularly pleased with one feature of the dining room service. He doesn't have to tip the waiters.

IT isn't in the banking paper field alone that original papers are annoyed by the little fellow with the snippers, stealing even headlines and trite expressions. Here's a "kick" from the Chicago Tribune:

We notice that a contemporary which is esteemed when not hysterical has copped one of our favorite expressions, "the blow." It was a useful tool to us, but we are fearsome of its health when exposed in such flimsy garments.

REALLY it's bad enough to see your own original matter staring you in the face from the pages of a contemporary, surrounded by other "stolen goods," but to be called names for noting the fact when an apology should be forthcoming, stamps the culprit as an "intentional."

THERE isn't any question about it! Look over the list of keen, prosperous state associations and you will find that the basis is a group system of organization in which the group chairman become, ex officio, the members of the state executive council. Many believe that the big national body ought to have for its council the chairmen or presidents of the state association. This may never happen, but that doesn't alter the desirability.

AT least one Chicago trust company, and one that does "Responsible Banking," too, has found a way to lure deposits away from other banks by offering 3 per cent interest on checking balances. They call it an "investors' account," but allow you to check against it. This is one way of beating the gentlemen's agreement to not pay over 2 per cent on demand balances.

THE Cobe race was a failure in a financial way by being over touted. They had the public believing weeks before the event that seats and sandwiches were at a premium and hard to get at three prices. It simply was false boasting but it kept people away.

SOME banks continually boast about their age which isn't a competitive quality and couldn't be taken away from them except by death. Bragging about responsibility or honesty isn't any more effective when done by a bank than if done by a department store or an individual. It simply is brag which doesn't go far in financial affairs. Capital, surplus, strong names and clean record are about the main attractions to a prospective banking customer.

"A GROWING Institution" is the title line to a fine little booklet sent out by the Oakes National, a lusty five-year-old at Oakes, N. D. Their deposits are $225,000 on $25,000 capital, and they have just settled down in a fine, new building. H. S. Nicholls is president and Hans Lee cashier.

KEYSER of Missouri is out with two new rewards addressed "to sheriffs and police officers" for the capture of two check makers whom he fully describes. This is about the only effective way of driving such men from a state.

THE May "Burroughs" contains some very interesting reading on adding machine contests which the juniors will want to read. Copies may be had for the asking.

THE Oklahoma "Bank Deposit Guarantee Journal" has a new department "About Banks and Bankers." It's good, too. This pretty nearly completes the list. Only two little fellows have winced in type at the truth of these paragraphs relating to feature head lines. There is a reason.

ANOTHER good thing in the line of addresses is the paper of Bank Examiner Jones of South Dakota at the Pierre convention. His talk is the orthodox gospel on publicity, supervision and inspection, and can be subscribed to by every enlightened, progressive banker in the country. Private snap or political banking could not exist under his plan. The South Dakota law, now in effect, is intended to put most of his theories into practice.

AT the present time there are in Minnesota 640 state banks, 265 national banks, 3 private banks, 11 savings banks and 4 trust companies, making a total of 924 financial institutions eligible for membership in the state association. It is to be hoped that at the next convention a large majority of these institutions still outside of the association will have become members.

C. R. FROST.

M R. FROST has a rogues' gallery, which tops all other state associations, and now the Interstate Protective Association is to have one. This is going some and puts the sleepy old A. B. A. still further back on the shelf.

EVERY banker worth the name knows Col. "Bob" Lowry. His Seattle speech in this issue is as good as they come. In April last he spoke to the group men of his own state on "A Banker's Suggestions to Southern Manufacturers and Planters." This address, we learn, is being circulated as a public document in the South and is doing a world of good. In Col. Lowry and Col. Watterson the South has a financial and political advisory team hard to beat.

TO show you that M. A. Graettinger was right when he thought he saw room for a nice, tight little bank in the retail district of Milwaukee it is only necessary to point to $1,250,000 in deposits which the new bank shows. The future looks bright for the "M. & M."

P. S. Don't neglect to read the opening paragraph (page 17) of George E. Allen's Seattle address on what a banker is made of. You will read the other paragraphs without further urging.

Our Country from a Banker's Viewpoint

Col. Robert J. Lowry, of Atlanta, in an eloquent tribute to his fellow bankers, at the Tri-State convention at Seattle, his talk being national in its scope

One is hardly prepared to form a conception of this dream of a country unless he comes and sees it. You have a perfect empire here in this magnificent section tributary to this beautiful city of Seattle. As the natural outlet of this productive section you have every opportunity and inducement to grow, to say nothing of the millions of dollars of virgin wealth pouring into your city every year in the form of gold from the Klondike. I am an interested student here, my friends, and the more I learn, the more I want to learn. Fascination would hardly express my feelings when I contemplate the grandeur of your scenery, the magnitude of your agricultural and commercial possibilities, the beauty of your cities, and the hospitality of your people. I am struck with a wonder, which would overwhelm me but for the fact that the thought comes to me, "This is America, and no more than you might reasonably expect from Americans." I have traveled all over this country, and everywhere I go I find there are lots of "our kind of folks."

In going over this country I have had deeply impressed upon my mind the significant fact that there is to-day no prosperity for one section of the country, that all do not share therein. The West, the East, the North, and the South partake alike of the prosperity of each other and of all. We are all working in harmonious accord; we have a common destiny as integral parts of this great whole; as units in the great Union of States, banded together under the common ensign of the Stars and Stripes, we present an invincible front to the world, exciting mingled feelings of fear and admiration, marching side by side down through the vista of years to come, the four great sections of this indissoluble union of sovereign states will be a monument to freedom and fair play, the wonder of the world, and the example sought to be emulated by all nations!

We look from one end of this country to the other, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and we are forced to the conclusion that the God who rules the affairs of men and nations has evolved this government from the crumbling ruins of oppressive dynasties in Europe to lead mankind up to a higher estimate of its dignity and worth, and teach by object lesson that the law of conscience is supreme! In scanning this entire country, friends, we have reason to take courage. From a commercial standpoint we are prepared to grow. When we consider our great cities, which are like throbbing heart-centers, giving impulse and energy to commerce; when we think of our coal-beds, lumber, wheat, cotton, iron, fruits, turpentine, sugar-cane, lead and other minerals, grain and food stuffs, and all of the mass of other valuable raw products of our magnificent country, we do not have to cultivate the spirit of optimism, for we spontaneously exclaim, "Surely our lines have been cast in pleasant and profitable places."

We have the right to be optimistic; we should have no feelings of depression; we have the surest ground for confidence, and we should not for a single moment entertain any other sentiment than that we have the grandest country on earth, that we are working in harmony, bound together by ties of friendship and patriotism, an indissoluble and indestructible union, a monument to freedom, liberty and peace, the like of which is not known elsewhere on the face of the earth. When we consider that this country has such gigantic resources, and is backed by such a vast storehouse of natural wealth, I do not feel that we should worry about our material and financial future, and let me say in all sincerity that in this great country, the greatest upon earth to-day, we have no room for the pessimist, the calamity-howler, and the croaker, who is only happy when he is miserable. He is a menace and is utterly blind to his surroundings.

It is a well-known fact that bankers of this country are patriots. It is the part of the patriot to yearn for the welfare of his country. He feels not alone concerned in his own affairs, but he longs for the substantial progress and thrift of his neighbors and fellow-countrymen. We, as bankers, should not only recognize the rights, possibilities, and privileges of those within our immediate city, or those within our immediate state, for our interests are co-relative with those living in the remotest corners of our nation. Has it ever occurred to you, friends,—I am sure it has occurred to me forcibly time and again—that all sections of our country are bound together naturally by the very closest ties of political and commercial interest; that this community of interest unites and solidifies the whole nation; and that not a single state in this nation can act independently of the others in an absolute sense? Did not the financial flurry of 1907 force upon every one of us a stern and convincing realization of the fact that a bank cannot totter upon an unsafe foundation in one of the great eastern centers without every financial institution in the land reflecting that disturbance? So close is our financial relationship to-day that no section of this country can have prosperity but that every other section will participate, and no section can have disaster that is not felt from shore to shore, like the ripples on the smooth surface of the pond when a stone is cast into its waters. It has been said by a great scientist that a man cannot even flip the ash from his cigar but that the moon must bow and the sun must nod. Hence, if our bankers were not patriotic from motives of patriotism purely, their community of interest would at any rate force their realization of the rights of others, and a necessary observance of the golden rule in their business relations.

Let me hasten to say in this connection, however, that so far as the bankers of this country are concerned, it has been my unbiased observation that their patriotism is not predicated upon self-interest, but upon the broad American principle of justice and fair play, which towers above all partisan policy, sectional issues, and local prejudice.

Not only is patriotism characteristic of the bankers, as a class, but the thread of true blue, which is clearly exposed to view in the fabric of our republic, is the incorrupt patriotism of our people, and the everlasting inborn spirit of freedom and justice. Let me say that you may wipe out every bank in the whole nation; you may sweep away every vestige of material prosperity by panic or providential disaster, and I challenge dispute, when I say that the patriotic American spirit would recoup the losses, and rebuild on a larger and broader scale than ever. I cite the bright shining example of San Francisco, which is rising Phoenix-like from the ashes of her ruin by earthquake and fire, and she will be a greater and grander city in the future than she has been in the past. These principles of thrift and intelligent effort in the face of disaster have been evolved in America as the direct result of the broad principles of self-government handed down to us by our fathers. We have built a nation which is our pride and our inspiration, and so long as the principles fought for by our fathers shall be the motive power of national life, so long shall our flag be the symbol of unparalleled prosperity at home and unequalled power abroad.

I come to you to-day with greetings from the fair Southland. I come to you with a message of hope, good cheer and optimism. I have not come to tell you of the wonderful possibilities of your great section of country here, for I would not care to consume your time and burden your patience in telling you things that you already know. I can, however, congratulate you upon your magnificent progress of the past and your marvellous possibilities of the future. I can say for the Southern people that we rejoice to see the evidence of growth, progress and industry anywhere in this broad land of ours. We extend to you and to all other sections the right hand of fellowship, and we are proud to say that we are a part of that great people, united under a common flag with a common destiny, and actuated by the same motives, whether they live at the mouth of the Savannah River or at Puget Sound.

I come to you from the Empire State of the South, one of the original thirteen colonies, which took its active part in throwing off the British yoke, and establishing the republic, of which all this country west of the Mississippi has since become an important and appreciated part. Coming from a section rich in its natural resources, and unexcelled in its climate, we extend the heartiest welcome to any and all good people, who may choose to come into our midst. We do not claim that our section of the country is any better than any other section, but such prosperity as we enjoy helps the prosperity of the entire country, and, as bankers, we are interested in the prosperity of the whole nation. As one who is glad to exploit his own wares, when he can find as willing and as patient an audience as this, I am disposed to tell you a few things about the South, and particularly that section where I have spent my life.

In Georgia we have to-day one hundred national banks and five hundred and seventeen state banks, with paid-up capital, surplus and deposits aggregating considerably over one hundred millions of dollars. We have one hundred and forty-six counties in our state, with an average of about five banks to a county, and very few of them do as small a business as was done by the largest banks fifty years ago. Our bankers are safe, conservative, painstaking men of the very highest order of integrity, and they enjoy the confidence of our people. There have only been two or three bank failures within our state in the past ten years, notwithstanding their rapid growth in number. To give a definite idea of their numerical growth, I will state that within the past six years there have been chartered within the state of Georgia fifty-four national banks and two hundred and ninety-seven state banks.

The question might reasonably be asked "Why has this rapid increase in the number of your banks come about?" I answer that question by saying that this is entirely due to the rapid development along all lines of the commercial and industrial interests of our state within the past two or three decades. The necessity arose for greater banking facilities, and the banks were established. In natural resources and industrial advantages Georgia is second to no state in the Union, but up to twenty-five years ago we were somewhat backward in development along industrial lines. Our environment has in a large measure been responsible for this fact. It is generally known as a fact that in the early history of this country the South led in manufacturing enterprises. Then the institution of slavery made of us almost an exclusively agricultural people, selling our cotton as a raw product, and content to slumber over our natural industrial resources.

Up to the Civil War period the Southern planter, with his large plantation and his slave labor, was a nabob; his plantation was a miniature kingdom, he lived in ease, his slaves raised a crop of cotton each year, which did not have to be sold by solicitation; it sold readily, and he had money, and the comforts of independent country life; he was a prince of good fellows among his neighbors, his chief care being the health and strength of his slaves, the indulgence of his family and the luxury of his home. His peaceful sense of security from want was never disturbed by the progressive restlessness of modern business traffic; he was an agriculturist, bred and born as such, and from father to son agriculture on a large scale was the business of the South and continued so up to the Civil War.

During the past twenty-five years, however, we have been rapidly changing from an agricultural population to a people of varied pursuits; transmission by electricity has largely increased the intrinsic value of our water powers, and our people are aroused as never before to the development of this enormous asset of our section. They are likewise deeply concerned about the matter of industrial and technical education, that the future progress of our section, as a manufacturing center, may be what we naturally have the right to expect it to be. The South to-day looks to the future with a hope that is born of the assurance of its might and its possibilities, and as a result industrial enterprises of all kinds are springing up all over our section. We have just cause for reasonable pride ourselves, but the remainder of the country cannot appreciate too much the immense cotton crop of the South, which adds so much virgin wealth to the whole country every year. This is a crop which in its raw state is worth about six hundred million dollars, and which, manufactured (and with its by-products) amounts to considerably over a billion dollars. This is a gold-producing crop. In the South we raise about seventy-five per cent of the world's supply of cotton, and this means that Europe must ship us their gold or close their mills.

Now, in all this industrial development which has taken place in the South, the banks and bankers have played their important part. They have financed these great industrial enterprises, and fostered the growth of Southern industry by extending to each and every worthy enterprise and its promoters the moral and financial support necessary for its substantial growth. Probably many of the large plants now successfully operating in the Southern states would doubtless have never been started but for the substantial aid pledged and furnished by the patriotic bankers of our section. After being successfully launched, probably some of them might not have been able to pass the experimental period, if the strong arm of the banks had not been behind their efforts and their determination to enlarge the volume and scope of the business. The inauguration of scarcely any enterprise of sufficient size to attract attention was not even contemplated until the advice of leading bankers was sought and obtained, and its organization in most instances depended upon the pledge of the banks to lend their co-operation and financial support to the movement. In short, the relation of the banks to the industrial development of the South is so close that we may call them an integral part of it. Certainly their interest in these enterprises is more than friendly, for they are vitally interested in their success, and it is too well known to need further comment here that the banks only prosper when all enterprises are prosperous, when the whole people are active and successful, and when wage-earners have employment at good wages.

You will pardon me if I appear to be moralizing, but there is a lesson here for all of us to learn. In view of the great work of developing the industries of not only the Southern section, but of any section, and in view of the important part that the banks must necessarily take in it, the imperative need of substantial co-operation among banks and bankers is plainly apparent. To prevent loss; to divide responsibility, to shoulder in common the burden of uplifting their section; to advise against undesirable risks and commend worthy ones; to freely give and receive information, which tends to prevent financial loss or to increase the legitimate profits of the one or the other; to post each other as to conditions, financial or political, which might affect the investment of money either favorably or adversely; to encourage the immigration of worthy capital and labor; to confer with each other in mutual confidence; in short, to co-operate fully and freely with each other and their patrons, both as individuals and as corporations, is the duty of bankers from the viewpoints of business expediency, commercial safety, patriotic co-operation, and the general promotion and inspiration of confidence.

We of the South, my friends, feel with the balance of the country thankful for this great and glorious government. We believe that the republican form of government will eventually dominate the world. A brave and homogeneous people governing themselves is a magnificent conception. Europeans laughed at our experiment and predicted the downfall of the young republic within less than a decade, but we "built wiser than they knew," and they reckoned without their hosts when they thought that a blood-bought independence could be maintained only through monarchy and absolutism. The tenets of freedom were promulgated, and are maintained in this country, because the constitution of these United States is written within the hearts of our people, and it was only committed to parchment to preserve history. We feel that the western ideal—republican government—will in time sweep every throne from the face of the earth, and emancipated nations in the future will bless the name of America as the champion and liberator of all mankind.

Southern men feel justly proud of the fact that Southern men led the Revolution, that Southern men framed that imperishable document, the constitution, that fair Virginia has been called the Mother of Presidents, and that this glorious republic, which to-day commands the respect and admiration of every lover of freedom on earth, and which is the common pride of

Chicago Visitors

Mr. Henry D. Sexton, president of the Southern Illinois National Bank, and Mr. L. D. Washburn, vice-president of the Citizens Savings & Trust Company, of East St. Louis, visited Chicago last week. These gentlemen report that business conditions are greatly improving in Southern Illinois and the prospects for the crops are most flattering. East St. Louis financial and business interests are much pleased with the action of the legislature in voting to sustain the East St. Louis Levee and Sanitary District Bond Issue of some $6,000,000, which will enable the people of that portion of Illinois to make improvements which will protect the river towns against the high water of the Mississippi River.

Judge H. W. Johnson, president of the Ottawa Banking & Trust Company, told his Chicago banking acquaintances that the Ottawa people expected a good attendance at the group meeting of Group Five at their semiannual meeting at Ottawa on June 23d.

Mr. Ed. Newton Dexter, of the First National Bank of Fort Wayne, Indiana, spent a day last week in Chicago, calling on his banking acquaintances, and joined the special train party going to the Seattle bankers' convention.

Mr. William W. Hackney, Jr., assistant cashier of the Central National Bank, Lincoln, Nebraska, passed through Chicago enroute home from the Shriners' convention at Louisville.

Mr. E. F. Goodell, cashier of John Stewart & Co., St. Charles, John C. Duffy, cashier of D. M. Erskine & Co., Highland Park, and Del D. Brownback, president of the Bank of Cowden, were Illinois bankers in Chicago on Thursday, June 17th.

En Route to Seattle

Chicago Chapter's special train to the annual A. I. B. convention, which is to be held at Seattle on June 21st, 22d and 23d, left Chicago Wednesday, June 16th, at 9 p. m., over the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. The party consisted of about one hundred and ten persons which included, in addition to Chicago's representatives and ladies, various delegations from the East and South.

For the convenience of the visiting delegates, while in Chicago, headquarters were established at the Grand Pacific Hotel. A reception committee was on hand most of the day to steer the guests around the city. Many of them took advantage of Flag-raising Day at the West Side Ball Park to witness the ball game between the "Cubs" and Brooklyn. The ladies of the party were escorted through the shopping district and to other points of feminine interest by a committee composed of the wives of several Chicago Chapter members. Dinner was tendered the delegates at the hotel in the evening which was the occasion for a general jollification. Messrs. Alling, Henry, MacMichael and Shanks responded to impromptu toasts and all the visitors expressed their appreciation and pleasure at Chicago's hospitality.

Lester B. Brady and wife; Arthur A. Briggs; W. L. Clark, wife and daughter; R. J. Cody;

Chas. S. Cole; R. G. Danielson; H. E. Ellefson and wife; R. B. Fuessle; Robt. G. Gadsden; Jos. O. Grant; Ed. T. Gillmeister; Craig B. Hazlewood; Gustave H. Heine; H. G. Herrick; Thad. S. Kerr; Fred D. Letz; L. J. Meahl; Andrew F. Moeller; John R. Nettenstrom; C. R. McKay; W. A. Roberts and wife; J. W. Rubecamp and wife; J. B. Schnell; Ralph R. Sleeper; J. F. Yokum; G. Fred York.

Besides these were Fred A. Crandall and daughter, Ralph Wilson and wife, and Geo. A. Jackson and wife.

The party was royally entertained by St. Paul and Minneapolis chapters when they reached those cities.

Daniel Crabb

Mr. Daniel Crabb, cashier of the Tazewell County National Bank of Delavan, Ill., attended the Peoria and Mt. Vernon group meetings. It is understood that Mr. Crabb will be a candidate for treasurer of the Bankers Association of Illinois at the forthcoming convention at Decatur in October.

The Chicago A. B. A. Convention

Plans for the big September convention of the American Bankers Association, in Chicago, thus far contemplate an "all American" team of speakers. Perhaps others may be added but those under pledge at present include Speaker Joseph G. Cannon; Comptroller Lawrence O. Murray; Professor J. G. Shurman, Cornell University; James J. Hill, and J. B. Forgan.

H. G. Barnum

Local bankers expect that H. G. Barnum, first vice-president of the Michigan Bankers Association, will be elected president at the annual meeting in Potosky next month. With his election, the next convention will go to his home city, Port Huron. At any rate, the Port Huron bankers are organizing for a concerted effort to land the next convention. This organization will eventually take the form of the bankers club of Port Huron. Mr. Barnum is president of the First National Exchange Bank of Port Huron. He is one of the most widely known bankers in the state and has been prominent in the affairs of the Michigan Bankers Association for a number of years.

How a 2 per cent tax on dividends would hit the largest corporations of the country is shown in the following table, comprising a very few of those that are household words. The dividends in each case are those reported as having been paid out last year:

State of Washington as Seen from the East

The fact that Washington is so largely an agricultural state is not to be lamented. Each year as time passes the agricultural interests of the world forge further to the front and occupy the time of a larger number of people and a larger acreage of our surface than ever before. Statistics tell us that in that section of our country west of the Mississippi alone 34,125 additional acres of land are brought under cultivation every day in the year. In the soil of every country necessarily reposes the basis of the life and prosperity of its people, and in the quality of that soil may be found a true measure of the future wealth of that section.

He who owns a farm owns a mine which he may work over and over again, year after year, upon whose output he can place absolute dependence so long as he elects to cultivate and properly care for it.

True there are in every locality a greater or a less number of subsidiary resources and industries, but they are all secondary in their nature and subsidiary in their effect upon the general prosperity of the people.

With your effective range of surface, which in its effect upon climate, temperature and season is equal to several degrees, Washington has an effective range which means that the farmer may raise any crop suited to any locality between your southern border and southern California.

However, it may never be said that Washington places all of her eggs in one basket. In endowments she has been favored to a degree that accords a marked and peculiar distinction. Not least among her bounties is the wealth of forestry, so vast in extent and so dense in growth that the appellation of the "Evergreen" state has become a fixed and permanent title.

Listen! Ten million acres in merchantable timber. Three-fourths of it west of the Cascade mountains, showing a density in stand such as was never approached by any of the great lumber producing sections of the world in their pristine condition. The United States Government reports tell us that you have within the boundaries of the State of Washington, 195,658,080,000 feet of standing timber. Of this entire amount 93,202,800,000—or nearly one-half of it—are credited by the Government to those twelve counties bordering on Puget Sound, Skagit County leading with 13,563,100,000 feet. The eight southwestern counties contain 76,624,700,000 with Chehalis far in the lead showing 23,580,000,000 feet to its credit.

While you have cedar, hemlock, spruce and pine in abundance, it is but proper to state that the giant Douglass fir is far in the lead, being credited by the government with 110,412,252,000 feet.

From its earliest history forestry has played an important part in the development of the state. It has furnished the impetus for the multiplication of avenues of employment, and has distributed enormous sums for the enrichment of the landowners, the manufacturer, the laborer and merchant. To-day its various ramifications command the service regularly of 100,000 people, to whom are dispersed annually $70,000,000 in wages. This great factor has placed Washington in the unquestioned first place in the fourth greatest industry of the United States.

In the words of a superior authority we have been for several years suffering hysteria over great corporations and great personal fortunes. Their size frightens us, and we are making them a moral issue. We demand of concentrated wealth a higher standard of ethics than we demand of distributed wealth.

It is all right for us little fellows to crush our competitors if we can, but our big neighbor must not. We may lobby for laws, but they must not. We, as individuals, may dodge taxes, but they must not. We may devote time and money for political purposes, but they must not. We are hunting millionaires to indict and corporations to attack. The dividing line is drawn at size and not at sin.

Fifty years ago the soil of your state was just as rich as it is to-day, but what was it worth? At that time it could be had for the asking—now it can hardly be acquired at any price. How do you explain it? Not that the railroad has enriched your soil, but that it has brought the markets directly to your doors.

Has it occurred to you that the large insurance companies are holders of the municipal bonds, state bonds and industrial bonds that have enabled you and me to improve our towns, beautify our cities, and develop the resources of our states?

Believe me, I would not be misunderstood, I stand firmly for the enactment and the enforcement of laws necessary for good government. Laws, the administration of which will bring about the most good to the largest number. Laws fair alike to the individual and to the corporation, to the rich and to the poor.

I tell you to-day that could we by some kind of legislation prorate the wealth of the entire world among all mankind, share and share alike, the time thereafter would be extremely short till some of us acquired our neighbor's lot, and others would again suffer poverty, penury and woe.

In each of your respective communities you, as the banker, as well as individual, represent the business head of your community. Your position carries much responsibility with it. You occupy the position you do probably because you have been successful, and as much reliance is placed in your judgment as in your integrity, it is "up to you" to do the right thing. You can and do have much to do in shaping public opinion, and it behooves us to keep it healthy.

Do not misunderstand me. While I believe in personal liberty, I agree with those who are jealous of forfeiting commercial liberty for an equally dangerous brand of financial concentration, leaving our vast inheritance of wealth unrestrictedly in the hands of a few men whose minds are warped and diseased by an uncontrollable desire for money. And I do believe in the government taking a hand whenever necessary to administer justice; that both state and nation should exercise proper authority and enforce laws rigidly.

To speak more directly of Washington again, there are no people who have greater reason for satisfaction with their lot than yourselves. With banking resources of more than two hundred millions of dollars, you have for every man, woman and child in the state nearly six times the amount per capita of the United States, which on the first of this month was $35.01, the highest in the history of our country.

In populating your great state, you have been most fortunate, you have gathered unto yourselves the very best in all the states around you. You have chosen those people who, caring not for the glare and glamor of life, have rather chosen the simple life. You have chosen those who have not only lived themselves, but taught their children around their firesides those splendid principles which have ever characterized our people as a truly great nation.

Fifty years ago the only commercial highway

west of the Missouri was the Santa Fe trail: freight was hauled on prairie schooners, and mail was carried on ponies. To-day there is sufficient railway mileage in the State of Washington alone to span the North American Continent with still enough left to loop the loop around San Francisco, Salt Lake City, and Seattle.

The little patches of grain that once dotted your prairies have grown into immense fields whose boundary lines are marked by the horizon alone. The distance that once separated the North from the South and the East from the West has almost disappeared. Railroads have threaded their ways across prairies and wound themselves around mountain tops until almost every part of the country is accessible. With our splendid transportation facilities, old age alone makes distance. Ties commercially and personally have been established between the East and the West that nothing can ever sever.

There was a time when the bankers of the East and their brother bankers of the West seldom saw each other, but the personal equation now largely enters into it, and we realize to the fullest that passage of scripture which tells us that we "be brethren."

You need only a few more years of commercial and industrial development to place you in the foremost rank of all the states. Capital stands like a timid maiden on the threshold of your state waiting to be invited in. Many miles of railways await to be stretched across your prairies. Will you keep them out? I hope not. Make good laws and enforce them. Help to improve your present industries and institutions. Use persuasion rather than coercion, and temper justice with moderation.

Men of the Northwest, you have builded wisely and well, and the eyes of the world are upon you. But the Northwest of to-day, great as she is, must far surpass this greatness in years to come. Your waterways give an outlet to the sea. Your railroads touch every part of the continent. Your name and fame have reached every part of the habitable globe.

The Panama Canal once builded as it soon will be, will give you an unbroken and unobstructed highway to the millions of hidden treasures of Europe and the East. An ever-increasing stream of commerce will flow through your state till your banks, which are truly the granaries of the harvest, will be filled to overflowing.

Let me say right here that the Northwest could never have reached her high position in commercial life had it not been for her banks. They have indeed been the granaries of the harvest. Some one has said the banks of a country are the milestones of its civilization. I would rather say, the banks of the country are the lighthouses along the shore, lighting the ships on life's sea, laden with the treasure of man's toil, to safe harbor. Yea, our watchtower of strength to whose light in the dark, stormy hours of financial night, thrones, principalities and powers have looked to catch the gleam of hope and to hear the watchman cry, "All is well."

Washington bankers have written a glorious record in the past, and they will write a still more glorious record in the days to come. Could I but lift the veil that hides the future from us and see the Washington to be, I would see a "wonderland."

Washington is not a very old state. No effete civilizations have strewn its coasts with monuments or memories. No unnumbered generations have drawn from its generous soil life giving subsistence. All its endowments of multiplied riches bestowed upon it by a beneficent creator are still locked within its bosom, soil rich as the Valley of the Nile; climate as varied almost as that of continental Europe and mineral wealth varied almost as that of the lands of the earth.

Surely there is a future pregnant with progress and power awaiting you. You have only begun

Steel Fails to Enter Paris Bourse

London, June 16, 3 a. m.—The Financial Times prints a Paris dispatch stating that negotiations for listing the common stock of the United States Steel corporation at the bourse have definitely failed. The dispatch adds that the entire business seems to have been mismanaged from the outset owing to ignorance of the French laws and regulations governing the stock market.

French officials began to ask how the Bankers' Trust Company could go into such an undertaking. It had to agree to pay 10 per cent of the earnings of all steel stock traded in in Paris annually in perpetuity. Would the New York Trust Company laws allow it to bind itself to such an obligation? Where did its profit come in?

There is editorial discussion, among other subjects, of the progress of tariff legislation, and the Supreme Court's decision in the commodities case.

Secretary Rankin of Ohio Bankers Makes Report at Toledo

Secretary S. B. Rankin of the Ohio bankers read an interesting report at the Ohio convention at Toledo. He notes that the past year, the 18th in the history of the Ohio Bankers Association, has been in every respect the most prosperous. The membership to-day is 752, the highest number ever reached. The association has grown to such proportions that its functions may properly be divided into ten branches, each of which is an important part of the whole. The council of administration has control of the business of the association during the recess between conventions. The membership of the council is proportioned in a very equitable and democratic manner. Each section of the state is always represented, and the members in each group elect their own chairman, who becomes their representative on the council. The members of the association as a whole have final option, however, as a report of the council transactions is made each year to the state convention, subject to the approval or disapproval of all the members. The council has authority under the constitution to determine the time and place of each annual convention, to fill vacancies in the offices of the association, and also in the said council and all other committees created by the association. The president is authorized under the constitution to appoint annually two members of the association to act with the secretary as a protective committee. While there is nothing in the constitution providing for the selection of a legislative committee, it has been the custom for the president to appoint this committee each year.

The membership dues, together with burglary insurance commissions and fidelity bond commissions, constitute the three sources of income of the association. With the constant changes taking place, new banks being organized, consolidations, failures, voluntary liquidations, and solicitation of new members, this branch itself involves much work each year.

During the past seven and a half years, the association, through its secretary as personal agent, has written about a million and a half dollars burglary insurance, this amount now being in force. Since we started in the business, burglary insurance rates in Ohio have been reduced 50 per cent. This resulted to the advantage of all the banks of the state. The bankers of Ohio should appreciate this fact, and at every opportunity favor the association in placing such insurance.

While the burglary insurance business is solicited directly from the secretary's office, and written exclusively through this office, the fidelity bond business is solicited both by the secretary and by the various local agents throughout the state, the agents delivering the bonds. Our connection with the American Surety Company will not result in a reduction of fidelity bond rates, as this business has evidently never been adjusted on a scientific basis. We have been informed that many of the companies writing this class of business have had such heavy losses that they deemed it wise to enter into a compact whereby rates should be advanced after March 1, 1909, thus virtually putting all companies upon the same basis as to kind of policies written and rates.

Your secretary has attended every group meeting held in the state with one exception, and we believe from all information gathered at these meetings that the groups in Ohio, taken all together, have been more successful than the groups of any other state in the Union for the first year and a half. All the meetings have been exceptionally well attended, and interest seems to be continually growing. Reports of each group will be given later by the respective chairman.

One of the important functions of the council administration is the arrangement each year for the state convention. The appointment of a committee to arrange the program, the deciding of the time and place of the convention, and other features occurring each year in connection with such conventions, are matters of very great importance.

The Ohio Banker ended the first year of its existence in February, 1909. I believe that it has proven to be a valuable adjunct to the association's work. All members are requested to send items of interest to the paper at any time, as it is devoted to the interests of the association, and not the banks of Ohio, only.

as miscellaneous. Under this head a great number of matters which cannot be classified specially under the other classes, are continually occurring. As the secretary of the state association is also secretary of the legislative and protective committees, keeping the records of both, the report I have just read will perhaps give the association an idea of the work accomplished in the secretary's office.

The members of the council of administration all deserve great credit for the excellent work they have done during the past year, and their efforts have in no small degree contributed to a very successful year. I hope and believe the association will continue to grow until every bank in the state is enrolled as a member.

Before closing, I wish to pay a personal tribute to the memory of our deceased president, the late A. E. Rice. He was never called upon for advice or help that he did not promptly respond, and he was ever ready to advance the interests of the association.

A man of the highest character and integrity, a friend to all who needed a friend, and a foe to all who deserved the censure of good men. Modest, unassuming, but ever ready to battle for the right as he saw it. The association has lost a valuable member and a loyal friend.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

In Twin City financial circles the summer inactivity is on. Lots of bankers are at their desks in the St. Paul and Minneapolis banks, but many are on their vacations and at summer bankers' meetings. Several of the bank clerks from the two cities are at Seattle for the American Institute of Banking convention. Many of the bankers are at the South Dakota convention and others are headed for the tri-state convention at Seattle. Some who were not privileged to take the Seattle trip just now, because one or two officials had to be left at the helm in each banking institution will go later. Frank E. Holton of the Northwestern is one of these. What bankers are not on tours are many of them living at White Bear lake, or at Lake Minnetonka, and if they are not dwelling at the lakes are whiling away much time trying to hit golf balls.

One of the pleasant features of the summer time is the call from bankers from the East who are on their way West for the conventions, the A.-Y.-P. exposition or the mountain summer resorts.

South Dakota Advances Bank Capital

On July 1st, South Dakota advances its bank capital minimum from $5,000 to $10,000 and banks which are to have $5,000 capital are in a grand rush to get their incorporations perfected before the change in the law. The law requires banks with less than $10,000 capital to increase it as soon as the deposits reach an amount equal to ten times the capital. Other safeguards to protect the interests of depositors are included in the law.

Among these is one prohibiting any bank from accepting deposits when they have reached a sum more than fifteen times the capital. It is said that banks are to be found in the state with $25,000 capital and carrying nearly $1,000,000 of deposits. Upon failure banks are placed in the hands of the state examiner, whose duty it is to wind up the affairs of the bank without a heavy fee charge, and to give the depositors the protection of the law.

Demonstrates Safe Blowing

Lowell Parker of Omaha, gave a demonstration of safe blowing methods followed by yeggmen, at St. Paul, at the time of the Minnesota Bankers convention at Lake Minnetonka. The expert hammered above the safe door long enough for the heat to expand a small crack. The first charge of nitro-glycerine was blown in and fired. This discharge made a bigger crack into which was blown a larger charge of the explosive. The safe was first incased in heavy blankets to deaden the noise, and then the explosive was fired. It blew the safe door 15 feet away. One and three-quarters ounces were required of the nitro to wreck the safe. It took 32 minutes to do the work. Thirty bankers were present.

Farmers' State Bank

The Farmers' State Bank of Osseo, a suburb of Minneapolis, has been organized. Its capital is $10,000 and its liability limit $50,000. The incorporators are J. W. Hamilton, H. B. Spence, C. H. Setzler, O. P. Setzler, J. M. Evans, P. F. Prenzlow, O. J. Schley, Peter Rougier, Charles Hechtman, J. A. Hamilton, William Renking, A. P. Hechtman of Osseo; A. D. Pouliot and A. Aubin of Hamel.

Tax Certificate Sale Oversubscribed

St. Paul's tax levy certificate sale of $2,095,000 was largely oversubscribed. The issue is $222,000 larger than that of 1908 and 208 persons had applied for portions of the overissue. The certificates are so popular among the people who have small funds to invest that the subscriptions are generally renewed at the close of each year. Home patrons are preferred in the sale. The outstanding certificates aggregate $1,173,000 and before the sale closed $1,500,000 had been handed in for renewal. Some of the banks and trust companies put in bids aggregating $150,000, but the city officials kept up the old policy of taking care of small subscribers at first.

A. H. Wilson has been elected president, and A. J. McDonald, cashier of the new Peoples Savings Bank, Garrison, Ia.

Postal Savings Banks at Indiana Convention

The correct theory of our government, it seems to me, is that it should not engage in business that can be as well or better done by individuals—by the people at large. Congressman Fowler, chairman of the committee on banking and currency of the national house of representatives, has recently well said: "Neither a government savings bank nor a government guaranty of bank deposits, which are identical in fact and principle, should find any place on the statute books of our country, whose chief asset, greatest strength, and crowning glory, is the individualism of our citizenship." But here is a proposition that the general government should embark in a great banking scheme, where it is claimed it would shortly gather in many hundreds of millions of dollars in opposition to and in disorganization of our whole system of commercial, trust company and savings bank business. It is barely possible that this vast withdrawal of savings deposits from the banks and trust companies of the states, that they may be deposited with the government, might not under ordinary circumstances, seriously damage national banks, for the proposed act provides that these government postal receipts are to be deposited with the national bank or banks nearest the point where such deposits have been received.

But what of your state banks, your trust companies and savings banks? No one of those can have returned to it its share of the many hundreds of millions of deposits it is claimed the government would draw from them, especially in times of panic or financial unrest, by its proposition to practically guarantee postal deposits by the provision that when these have been placed by the government in national banks they shall become a first lien on all the assets of any insolvent bank, and by reason of which provision the ordinary depositor, under certain conditions, wouldn't receive a cent of his deposits, while the government postal depositors wouldn't lose a cent. Would you gentlemen here assembledumble over yourselves to deposit your daily balances in a national bank where one-half of its deposits, under any conditions, had to be paid one hundred cents upon the dollar before you could have one cent upon the dollar? Wouldn't you prefer to cross the street and deposit with a national bank or trust company that had no such entangling alliance with the government, and where one man's deposit was no better than the others? If that be true, the national banks of the country couldn't afford to receive the postal savings deposits of the government, nor would they, and the money would lie idle in the vaults of the United States, contracting the currency and bringing disaster, while the government must meanwhile go on paying 2 per cent interest upon its idle funds. Is there any wonder, therefore, that while at first glance it would seem that the national banks of the country were to be made the chief beneficiaries of this proposed bill, not a responsible national bank officer in the United States, so far as I know, is favorable to it?

But after all, it is not the national banks that are closest to the common people of the country. It is the state banks, the trust companies and the savings banks that mainly care for the money and the savings of the humbler classes. How would this proposed postal savings law affect those? In my own town of Ft. Wayne, we have three well managed, prosperous trust companies, with total assets of some six millions of dollars. Now a trust company is simply an improved order of a savings bank, and they have very generally taken the place of these and of the old-time building and loan association. They are the home builders of our towns and cities. I am an officer in one of these trust companies at Ft. Wayne. In common with the others, our money is loaned at 6 per cent interest, mostly to men of small means, with which to erect homes, my own company making from eight to nine hundred such loans annually. During the years that have passed, a constant, never ending stream of the savings of our people have been pouring into these institutions and being just as constantly paid out for the upbuilding of our city, for the employment of carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers and other mechanics and laboring men generally, until now our city has become a city of home owners and not of home renters. This money thus kept at home has rapidly built up Ft. Wayne, has made unusually prosperous her business men, has afforded constant employment for both skilled and unskilled labor, and has enabled our city to pass through the panic year of 1908 with not a single failure of any importance among her business men.

But, gentlemen, put these practically-guaranteed-by-the-government postal savings banks into operation and let them shortly divert, as the postmaster general estimates they will, $500,000,000 of the earnings of our people and what would be the result? Remember every dollar of the deposits of savings institutions in your towns and cities, thus diverted from its rightful use in its local community, can only go into the coffers of the national banks, and thereafter not a dollar of it can be utilized or loaned upon mortgage. Home builders would stop building, your mechanics would eat the unsubstantial bread of idleness, and your business men would have an abundance of time to go fishing.

And what would the national banks of the country do with all this sudden influx of money, on which they are to pay  $2\frac{1}{4}$  per cent interest? With business depressed they cannot safely and profitably employ the deposits they already have, and so it is that for many months you have seen call money loaning in Wall Street, at from 1 to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. The best your national banks could do would be to invest such funds in railroad and other securities; or for the encouragement of local speculation; or the bolstering up of needy and doubtful local manufacturing enterprises; or deposit them in the great money centers of the country for what interest they might

Usefulness of a State Association

In his address before the Minnesota bankers Joseph Chapman, Jr., the retiring president, counseled a greater usefulness of the state association as a body and of the banker as an individual. The address was original rather than bookish or technical and he did not even mention "the panic of 1907." It later appears that Secretary Frost had in mind a similar field of usefulness for the association. In concluding his report, which really was a very fine paper, he believes that "the Minnesota Bankers Association is rapidly becoming an organization destined to accomplish great things for the state of Minnesota, and this should be so. Bankers, by reason of their training and the nature of their business, are in a much larger measure able to grasp and understand problems of state and society than probably any other class of men; and, thoroughly organized, must of necessity be a powerful influence for good. The time has come when bankers cannot any longer even assume a position of indifference in connection with the vital problems of the nation and of the state."

Going further in the same direction Mr. Frost says that "in venturing an opinion as to the future of your association, I do so after a thorough study of the conditions in which it must accomplish its work and its purposes. The opinion, gentlemen, is this,—that if the bankers of Minnesota will continue to work in as perfect harmony as they have during the past year or two, each man having for his main purpose the accomplishment of the greatest good to the greatest number, and fixing his energy for that accomplishment in a perfect organization, it will only be a short time when the Minnesota Bankers Association will have developed into the most powerful machine for the correction of civil evils and entanglements, and also for the placing of our state of Minnesota on a plane so high that every one, regardless of how far distant, may see and recognize its wonderful possibilities."

The Minnesota bankers have passed a new bank bill, and later amended it so as to practically eradicate wildcat or unsuspected banking in the state. This requires work, unity and ability. Mr. Chapman challenged the bankers to study the state's resources, her needs and her future. Other associations can be as powerful if they will unselfishly unite for better banking laws and the eradication of private snap speculation in the deposits of the gullible public.

Conserving the Assets of Banks

Public Examiner Jones, of South Dakota, in his address at Pierre, takes the high ground that bankers never ought to oppose any legislation or amendment of banking laws intended to "conserve the assets of our banks by proper safeguards and restrictions, helpful and intelligent supervision of practices and of officials, that they will not be squandered by neglect, poor judgment nor dishonesty." Mr. Jones points out that many bankers take a wrong view of such questions, fearing that publicity and inspection might be in some sense personally inconvenient or unprofitable. The board view including safety and better banking is the only true position. He says that "our legislators should realize that our good bankers are pre-eminently the best fitted to suggest such legislation as will be practical in regulating the banking business, and in protecting the people, and they certainly fail in their duties when they refuse to accord a fair hearing to the old and experienced banker, when considering measures affecting not alone his business, but measures which concern the community at large and upon which the best judgment should be had. On the other hand our bankers should take a livelier and more lasting interest in pushing for proper legislation along banking and other commercial lines."

What Mr. Jones here says is not included in his printed address, elsewhere in this issue, and it ought to be read carefully by all willing to help to bring about a state of banking which will be accepted by the people as a substitute for the radical demands of guaranty or postal banks. The examiner admits that there was a time when a very large part of the people were loud in the assertion that the mark of Cain was stamped upon the brow of every banker—that he was one to be looked upon with distrust and suspicion and would prove himself a Judas at the first opportunity. The cause for this distrust and suspicion was the methods followed by the unscrupulous and greedy loan shark who through the lax laws of earlier days was able to advertise himself a banker and thereby to bring discredit upon the entire banking fraternity.

He then goes on to say that "the criticism which suggests itself to my mind is that bankers as a body and as making up our associations, have not been as active or as prompt as they should have been in demanding laws calculated to raise the standard of this very important business—laws which would make it almost impossible for the crook, the get-rich-quick fellow, to get into a bank and absolutely impossible for him to remain. It is all important that bankers associations constitute themselves standing and everlasting committees, not alone to protect its members against undesirable and freakish legislation that may from time to time be pushed by the one-sided and selfish individual, but with equal force and as a positive quantity to suggest and work for laws which will command themselves to all fairminded men and the enactment of which will have a tendency to weed out the speculator and to increase the confidence of the farmer in our banks."

Mr. Jones believes that bank examinations cannot be too thorough, too exacting or too searching, and that they are not likely to happen too often. He thinks solvent banks will be helped and insolvent ones saved, or, liquidated in time to conserve the assets. He commends the new Minnesota law very highly. Insurance of deposits is optional in South Dakota, but the law has remained a dead letter. In Mr. Jones the state has an official of which she should be proud.

Postal Savings Banks at Indiana Convention

get, there to be used for the benefit of the stock gamblers of Wall Street or for the promotion of the plans of "predatory wealth" the country over.

But we are told these postal savings banks are needed chiefly by the ignorant foreigner—and the Italian is especially mentioned—who has been taught in his old home that he can find security for his money only in the guaranty of his government, and, because, he distrusts American banks, and cannot deposit in United States postal savings banks, sends his money to his former home country for safe keeping. While I believe there is absolutely nothing in this claim, I want to say, that even if it were true, this government could not afford to recognize and encourage such distrust of our financial institutions by itself engaging in the banking business upon the pretext that postal savings banks are needed for the special use and protection of its foreign born citizen. Far better would it be to help to Americanize such foreigners, and teach them confidence in the newer, better and more profitable savings bank methods of their adopted country. Like the Irish immigrants of early days, these Italians are sending much of their money home to relieve the wants of families and relatives they have left behind, and to aid them in their intention to also come to "God's country." Such moneys would and should go out of the country whether the United States government gets into or stays out of the banking business.

Frequently in the discussion of this question you hear the inquiry: "If most of the governments of Europe have found the postal savings banks system of value to them, why would it not also be of value to our government?" Simply because this government is not in need of the savings of its people with which to build "Dreadnaughts" and "Invincibles," support vast standing armies, and afloat an enormous public debt. The postal savings of Europe are chiefly invested in government bonds at 3 and 3½ per cent and they help to maintain the military despotisms under which these money savers are staggering. In order to attract more of these savings to the postal banks and away from private savings institutions, some of these governments are now allowing the depositors to open checking accounts with the post office. Others are adding the life and fire insurance features. Perhaps the enthusiasm of some illy informed people about the success of such banks abroad may be given something of a shock when they are told that in Austria, where every means possible is taken by the government to attract and increase savings deposits, the growth of such deposits for the post seven years has been but 3 per cent of the gain made by private savings institutions, or a gain of $18,500,000 in postal deposits for the seven years as against a gain of $687,000,000 for the private savings banks. Why, this gain in postal savings of $18,500,000 of the whole Austrian empire for the past seven years doesn't equal the gain on such deposits for the same period of the single state of Indiana. Such figures do not indicate that the system is growing in popularity even in Europe, where savings bank facilities are immensely inferior to the splendid system built up by individual enterprise in this country.

Time has not permitted so full a discussion of this subject as it should receive, but if I have said enough to put you all to thinking and to investigating for yourselves, I am content.

Fifty-two Banks Fight Guaranty Law

Omaha, Neb., June 21.—Fifty-two of the national and state banking houses of Nebraska appeared, through their attorneys, in the federal court to-day before Judge Munger to ask for an injunction to restrain the enforcement of the state guaranty of deposit act passed by the last legislature. The petition alleges that the law is confiscatory in that it appropriates the property of the depositors of one bank to liquidate the obligation of another.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., June 24.—Announcement is made by H. W. C. Jackson that a movement, backed by local bankers and business men, is on foot to institute a stock exchange in Spokane with a responsible membership and a select list of local securities approved by the banks, also to gradually reduce the balances carried in eastern banking houses and utilize the banks at home to make "call" loans on these securities. The chief aim, he explained, is to make Spokane an investment center, so that local enterprises of merit may be wholly or partly financed at home, which those identified with the plan believe will do much to promote the prosperity of the Inland Empire and conserve the best business interests of Spokane. He adds that the promoters of the new enterprise believe if the banks of Spokane, whose deposits aggregate approximately $25,000,000, agreed to accept as security for "call" loans the stocks and bonds of such corporations as the Washington Water Power Company, the Spokane and Inland Empire Electric Railway system, the Spokane International and Idaho and Washington Northern railroads, the banks, trust companies, mills, factories, and other sound incorporated enterprises of the Inland Empire, together with the higher grade of mining securities, they would be just as "liquid" as any securities now bought and sold on the New York exchange, provided, of course, there is a responsible exchange in Spokane through which to market them. This, he said, would have the effect of retaining here much capital that is now being deposited in New York and other eastern cities at low rates of interest and obviating the necessity of borrowing it back at higher rates or exorbitant terms to finance projects or enlarge existing enterprises.

United Securities Company, with handsomely appointed offices in the Peyton Building, is in the hands of Don Kizer, deputy prosecuting attorney of Spokane county, appointed temporary receiver by Judge J. D. Hinkle, and C. R. Hesselstine, its president, who disappeared soon after the complaint was filed, June 4th, has not been located. The receiver found $5.46 in the treasury of the company which represented its assets to be $1,000,000, including manufacturing plants and stocks in corporations. A. E. Pynch and other holders of life investment bonds, for which they paid $26,000 on the promise of a perpetual income, assert in a joint complaint, covering 30 pages, that the fraud was worked by Hesselstine, his wife and Mrs. Della K. Barlow. W. J. Mathews, counsel for the bondholders, says the scheme is so palpably a swindle that he will bring the matter before the grand jury. The names of prominent men were also used as officers of the company without their knowledge, it is alleged, and others were represented as owners of "bonds." Among these was W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National Bank of Spokane, and Fred R. Burch, an attorney of Seattle, whose name was used as vice-president of the company. The furniture valued at $2,000, was bought on the installment plan, $226 being paid to date. S. S. Bassett, counsel, says Hesselstine will return to Spokane to stand trial, claiming he has nothing to fear from an investigation.

Warning by P. C. Kauffman

"Eternal vigilance is the price of safety," says P. C. Kauffman, secretary of the State Bankers Association in a circular letter to bankers in Washington. He adds:

"Handle no pay checks for strangers, no matter how plausible their story, unless they are introduced and check indorsed by a responsible party.

"Never cash a check, draft or note for an unidentified or unknown party on the strength of the indorsement of some strong local name, unless the indorsement is made in your presence by the indorser or guarantor. Do not be satisfied to call up the indorser by telephone, as crooks often arrange to have a confederate at the indorser's place of business or home under some plausible pretext.

"Do not assume any risks. Remember the Pacific Northwest will be filled with crooks and sharpers of every class during the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition. Every plausible scheme will be worked."

Embezzlers Released on Bonds

Clarence W. Robnett, formerly bookkeeper for the Lewiston National Bank at Lewiston, Idaho, charged with embezzling funds amounting to $91,375, waived examination and furnished bonds for his release from custody, John E. Chapman, former assistant cashier, arrested on similar charges, pleaded not guilty before commissioner Green and was also released on $5,000 bonds. Frank W. Kettenbach, president of the bank, preferred the charges, alleging that Robnett embezzled funds and falsified the records over a period extending from December 31, 1904, to March 18, 1909. Chapman is also charged with embezzlement and making false entries. The total shortage at the bank is placed at $137,000. The arrests followed an all-day investigation by Claude Gatch, bank examiner, who has gone to Salem, Ore., leaving the case in the hands of C. H. Lingenfalter, district attorney. The preliminary hearing was to take place June 21st. It is understood that other arrests will be made, as Mr. Gatch is not satisfied that Robnett and Chapman are the only persons involved. Robnett came from Minneapolis to face the charges, while Chapman traveled from Portland, Ore. Both say they are not worried as to the outcome of the trial.

Open Saturday Evenings

Yakima Valley Bank and the Yakima Trust Company Bank of the North Yakima Clearing House Association has solved the saloon problem by opening their places from 6 to 8 o'clock on Saturday evenings, so that pay roll checks may be cashed without paying tribute to the liquor dealers, who heretofore handled from $8,000 to $10,000 every pay day.

First National of Nyssa

The comptroller of currency has approved the conversion of the Malheur County Bank, at Nyssa, Ore., into the First National Bank of Nyssa, with a capital of $25,000.

Lane County Loan and Savings Bank

Lane County Loan & Savings Bank has been incorporated for $10,000 by J. C. Gray, Fred Hollister, John Bergman, Jr., and C. F. Bergman. The institution will open at Florence, Ore., July 1st.

The Peoples Bank has been organized at Water Valley, Miss., with a capital of $100,000.

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the Associated Chapters A. I. of B. in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Independent Action and Universal Membership

Why Bankers Are Not As Other Men

The creed of the American Institute of Banking is that a banker should be about one-fifth accountant, two-fifths lawyer, three-fifths financier and four-fifths gentleman and scholar—total ten-fifths—double size. Any smaller man may be a pawbroker or a promoter but not a banker.

There is a big demand for big bankers, medium demand for medium bankers and little demand for little bankers. To make the kind and quantity of bankers demanded there is only one way and that is to make them make themselves. This can only be done by utilizing the power of united effort. The institute itself is an organization of sovereign chapters under the general government of chapter representatives. This form of administration begets some politics and frivolous fellowship but develops initiative, self-reliance, and serious and systematic study. Intellect is thus mixed with personality in scientific proportions. The old belief that the high brow and the glad hand cannot be combined in the same individual is dead and buried. It rests in peace with the older beliefs that the earth is flat and that the moon is made of green cheese. There are yet some earth-flatters and green-cheesers who allege the uselessness of education in general and of financial education in particular, but such talk comes mostly from self-made fathers who belie themselves by sending their sons to college.

The ambition of the institute is to fix and maintain a recognized standard of education in banking by means of official examinations and the issuance of certificates. Such certificates are issued in the name of the "American Bankers Association, American Institute of Banking Section," and signed by officers of the American Bankers Association and the American Institute of Banking. To qualify students for examinations for certificates the institute provides courses of study in banking and finance and law through alliances with such universities and correspondence schools as have revised and extended their educational facilities to suit institute requirements. This policy of co-operation with existing institutions has secured for the institute the best educational ability and experience without incurring uncertain and perhaps disastrous financial liabilities. The educational methods of the institute are diversified in accordance with the circumstances of its component chapters as follows:

Collegiate Method. In cities containing suitable schools of banking and finance and law alliances are made between such schools and local chapters for the conduct of study classes by professional instructors under the general supervision of the institute. Approved instructors are deputized to conduct examinations in behalf of the institute. The collegiate is the easiest of all methods of getting knowledge but the fact that such work requires from students only the minimum of initiative and self-reliance is not an unmixed advantage.

Chautauqua Method. In cities without suitable school facilities chapter class work is conducted by the educational director of the institute and consists of text-books and syllabi arranged for the use of non-professional instructors. Under this plan examinations are conducted from the institute general office. The Chautauqua method requires on the part of some local chapter member the ability of leadership and from all chapter members the spirit of loyalty and the genius of work.

Correspondence Method. Individual students outside of chapter cities are associated in the correspondence chapter in accordance with the general plan of education through organization. The special field of the correspondence chapter is to provide correspondence instruction for all chapter members on equal terms through alliances with correspondence schools. This method of study is perhaps the least inspiring of all, but the personal relationship established between students and instructors stimulates ambition and the fact that all lessons must be written insures thoroughness and thought.

The institute maintains that every banker should know banking from the standpoint of the statement of condition, which is the beginning and the end of all bank accounting and the crucial test of bank administration. With a clear conception of the statement of condition and the significance of its component items details of operation may be readily comprehended.

The institute maintains that every banker should know enough law to distinguish between what is law and what is legal opinion, so that he may act in accordance with established legalities and refer unsettled questions to a lawyer, always remembering the adage that a man who is his own lawyer has a fool for a client.

The institute maintains that every banker should know enough economics to distinguish between his own money and the money of his depositors. Such discrimination requires something more than conscience. It requires appreciation of the difference between tangible and intangible assets, between crops and land, between manufactured products and manufacturing plants, between credit and invested capital, between lending money and going into partnership. To buy wild land, undeveloped mines and stock in airship companies may be proper and profitable for personal funds, but no banker has any obligation or right to make or lose money for his depositors. His only obligation to them is to keep their money in safety and to return it when due.

While the work of the institute is mostly devoted to orthodox methods of banking and established principles of banking law, the investigation of current controversies is encouraged, with due caution, however, that there are two sides to most questions and that the other fellow's opinion is entitled to consideration. The air is full of financial isms which make profitable practice for financial quacks. This condition is unfortunate but it can neither be ignored nor evaded. It can be cured, not by decrying quacks, but by substituting for quackery something manifestly better. Until bankers unite in the advocacy of scientific remedies for existing financial diseases, they have little right to complain of the prescription of such nostrums as deposit guaranty, postal savings banks and other yellow pills.

Incidentally it may be proper to mention one thing which is too elementary to teach, a thing pertaining to simple arithmetic, a thing which all bankers who are bankers know without being told, but which some people in the banking business do not seem to comprehend. The thing thus referred to is the self-evident fact that no bank can pay abnormal interest on deposits and live. Any institution which pays such interest is in principle a bucket shop. A bucket shop is a concern which makes bets with its customers that the price of stocks will go a certain way. If the price so goes, the bucket shop wins. Otherwise the bucket shop breaks. A bank which pays abnormal interest on deposits bets with its depositors that it can somehow get abnormal returns from its loans and investments. The result is the same as in the case of the bucket shop. The only difference between the two gambling houses is that the bucket shop oftener beats the game.

In all its work, the institute realizes that knowledge obtained from books and lectures is incomplete until it is crystallized into wisdom through personal association and practical use. Knowledge is not wisdom until it is digested. Adam and Eve got knowledge in the Garden of Eden but they did not get wisdom until they were pushed outside and put to work. Proper digestion of knowledge into wisdom is provided in institute chapters where all kinds of people and all sorts of facts and opinions are commingled like stones and scrap-iron in the stomach of an ostrich. The digestive process may sometimes seem chaotic, but final assimilation produces strength and self-confidence.

Education aims to make men, and what the world wants to-day is men, men who know things and men who do things; men with the initiative of Lewis and Clark; men with the momentum of Hill and Harriman; men who can combine, as you have done in the Pacific Northwest, the glories of commerce and the charms of paradise; men who can follow the star of empire across the Ocean of Peace, and as the sun of progress awakens the Orient, can brighten its brilliancy with the splendor of American character.

His Church Believed in Him

Leavenworth, Kas.—John H. Wood, ex-president of the National Bank of Matthews, Ind., has been released from the federal prison here. He has served a term of six years on conviction of making illegal loans. Wood departed at once for his home in Oberlin, O., where he will join his wife and seven children.

While a convict here Wood has held the office of secretary of the First Congregational church of Oberlin, O., a tribute to him from the members of the congregation who believed in his honesty, having declared for his retention in office by unanimous vote. A delegation from the Oberlin church was sent to the trial in Indiana and returned with the report that while he was technically guilty, there was no intended crime.

At the prison Wood has held a responsible clerkship in the warden's office.

The Influence and Effect of Good Banking Laws

John L. Jones, public examiner for South Dakota, made the hit of his day at the South Dakota Bankers Convention at Pierre, last week. He said in part:

The banker has perhaps been a trifle slow to realize and admit the necessity and importance of strict laws regulating his business, but this is no more than natural, as the good banker knows his bank is sound and the speculative banker desires as few encumbrances as possible. Furthermore, we can all discover points which should be looked after in the other fellow and be blind to our own shortcomings. As individuals it is easy for us to get the idea that most laws were framed for our neighbors.

It is without doubt for such reasons that states which do not claim to have authority over the private banker, still have such handling the funds of their people, and we find that only within the last few years, several legislatures have enacted laws compelling the private banker to incorporate or to conform to all the essentials exacted of the incorporated bank.

The need of such legislation was made apparent by the number of failures of banks which were not restricted and supervised as compared with those which were, which certainly is the best evidence which can be had tending to show the necessity for, and good results from, proper and intelligent supervision.

A letter from the public examiner of Minnesota advises as follows: "There has been but one state bank failure here in the last eight years and that is paying out one hundred cents on the dollar." He states that the records are meagre and incomplete for the years prior to supervision but that numerous and heavy failures were then occurring from time to time.

The commissioner of banking of Wisconsin advises that not a dollar has been lost to the depositors of state banks in his state since the banking law now in force became operative.

Iowa has had seventy bank failures since 1893 and of this number forty-six were banks not under supervision. (This refers to banks other than national.)

I have received letters from the banking departments of ten or more states and in each and every case am advised of the marked improvement following systematic supervision.

All available statistics testify in certain and

positive language to the fact that good banking laws honestly interpreted and conscientiously followed bring about a condition highly pleasing to the banker and absolutely essential to sound and satisfactory business conditions, a condition which apparently cannot be produced in any other way.

One of the principal reasons, in my opinion, why bankers have been slow to push for strict banking laws, is that it has been difficult to bring them to realize the relationship existing between them and the people. They have argued as some few continue to insist, that there is no good reason why so much publicity should be given to their business any more than to other lines of business, and take the position that when they uncover or open up to the department, they have done all that should be expected or asked, overlooking the fact that the department cannot give out inside information—that the public is inquisitive and inclined to investigate and that the banks themselves must satisfy their customers as to their soundness in order to get and hold their confidence.

Every bank has some depositors which are much more easily flushed than others and it is important that this class should feel secure if others are to continue their confidence.

You good bankers endeavor to keep posted as to the condition of those banks which carry your reserves and knowing this you should be as anxious to satisfy those doing business with you.

The banking business being at least quasi-public can stand a liberal amount of daylight and grow and thrive the better for it, and most men, whether bankers or bakers are more inclined to follow the path pointed out by prudence and good judgment or the dictates of an unwarped conscience, if they know that the record is an open book and is subject to the approval or condemnation of a discerning public, which usually and in these days particularly, is no respecter of persons.

What is there about a good bank's business which should be so zealously covered up, aside from the names of its borrowers and depositors, and these are already known in a general way to every community. Publicity is a good thing for a good bank, and through it all banks experience a desire to be good.

On this point, G. G. Lacy, president of the clearing house association of St. Joseph, Missouri, says, "Public sentiment towards banks is crystallizing into a demand for more publicity of banking affairs. I mean by this more absolute knowledge that a bank which stands up before the public and invites public confidence is entitled to receive that confidence. There is no reason why the public should not know that a bank is well run and sound to the core. Bankers are beginning to realize this and to adopt methods that will bring it about, and where the public understands that the banks are taking all possible precaution and safeguards in the conduct of their affairs, they will be entitled to confidence and respect and it will be generously bestowed upon them by the public."

I know of one bank in the state which every morning hangs on a hook in its lobby a statement of its business at the close of the preceding day. This shows in detail where every dollar of reserve is carried and gives legal description of any real estate that it may own—in fact the statement is as comprehensive as it can well be made. Such a practice cannot but add to the popularity of any good bank.

I believe that a banking law which provides for all reasonable and proper publicity as to a bank's business will do more to eliminate the speculative and unsafe banker—to urge the real banker on to sounder and more conservative methods, and to satisfy and make depositors of the general public than anything else can possibly do.

Then too a bank can add to its safeguards and increase public confidence, through a representative board of directors, which appreciates its duties and responsibilities and is not content to be simply a "dummy," and to my mind that section of the new law which provides that board members shall be conveniently located and that regular board meetings must be held, will be productive of much good if lived up to in actual practice as it should be.

What bank with well informed board members of known stability and conservatism would have exchanged them for figureheads during the unpleasant and more or less uncertain days of 1907? What bank without such a board but could have made at least some small use of it?

Furthermore, a good, hardheaded director, not active in the daily affairs of the bank, but alive to its interests furnishes good ballast to many a cashier, and often causes him to think twice where he would only think once if at all.

From the nature of the business it might not be practical in all localities, but in my judgment much would be added to the safety of our banks if five directors was the minimum, which condition would usually find some member outside the charmed circle.

Few men who cripple or wreck their institutions start out with the idea of stealing—they only borrow, and are confident of their ability to return the money and in the mean time to make a profit for themselves. Many a man occupies a felon's cell to-day who is absolutely guiltless of intentional wrong at first—he was perhaps too ambitious—too eager for personal gain, and this desire outweighed his judgment, or perhaps he has permitted some one else, unlawfully, to use the bank's funds, hoping to benefit his bank through holding an old customer or getting a new one.

If a bank has an intelligent business-like board and the managing officer knows that the loans may be looked over at any time and that they will surely be examined regularly, such cases will seldom be found, or if they do exist will be discovered early enough to avoid serious consequences.

Banking laws as I understand the proposition are based upon experience and I believe that in this business as in others so far as certain fundamental principles govern, we are still constrained to say with the immortal Patrick Henry, "I have no lamp by which my feet are guided but the lamp of experience."

The net results, concentrated and boiled down, which have been gathered through experience, make up to a large extent the banking laws of this or any other state, and for the young, the inexperienced banker to think of casting these carelessly aside and of following his own notions or ideas would be as unwise as for the ship to sail with neither chart nor compass.

Such a one might be so fortunate as to prosper almost beyond measure for a time, carried along by the strong wave of general-good-times, but when this wave shall have spent its force—the reaction, the undertow, must be reckoned with, and the wise banker therefore will constantly keep in mind those certain unchangeable principles which insure in reasonable measure not alone temporary but permanent prosperity.

JAMES W. MAXWELL
Cashier Seattle National, Seattle, Washington

Experience has proven real estate a slow and undesirable asset for the commercial bank—it may be safe but it is not easily convertible when business has slowed up. Experience has taught many a bank to avoid second mortgages though in many cases the lesson was a dear one. Experience has proven that stocks of other corporations should not be carried by banks—for while an asset to-day they may be a liability to-morrow. Experience teaches the dangers which a bank may encounter in borrowing money to reloan as well as by incurring a heavy rediscount liability.

The banker can also in this way learn the wisdom of carefully selecting and distributing his loans, and the department could now furnish names and addresses of at least three banks in the state whose recent experience would prompt them to say "Amen" to this section.

There is, however, a manifest and as I believe, a too widespread tendency on the part of our banks to make large loans, and it is in many cases almost impossible to bring bankers to recognize the wisdom and importance of keeping within the limit. At times it seems as though every such banker must have his personal experience before he will admit the soundness of this section, or that the department will be driven to the extreme limit in order to enforce compliance.

By the experience of others we know it is unwise and unsafe to loan freely to a bank's officers or employees, and that as a rule all stockholders should be held in check when necessary. As I view it, the holder of bank stock should and is supposed to be a loaner of money rather than a borrower, but in any event the ownership of a few shares of stock should not operate to place one within easy reach of the bank's funds. Conditions should be made as strict certainly for such as for any other.

We also find that sound banks have healthy surplus accounts and do not distribute their profits too freely nor too promptly, thus holding themselves in position to meet losses and care for them. Such banks when losses are made admit the fact and charge the item out, rather than to secure a renewal which would enable them to show uncertain or doubtful profits to be used in the payment of dividends, thereby weakening the institution and perhaps impairing its capital.

Experience points out the wisdom of bonding a bank's officers and the folly of recognizing a signature when the drawer of the check has no balance. The new law holding active officers personally responsible for overdrafts should make it easy to turn down the checks of customers who cultivate this habit and we hope to find a generous cut in this item at many points.

The national law, as you know, does not, or is not supposed to, permit a bank to loan on real estate security and the laws of most states restrict their banks in this. Our new law is silent here by the recommendation of the department which was endorsed by the senate and house committees on banks and banking, as well as by your own executive committee, and right here I wish to quote a tribute to the mortgage which was clipped several years ago and which has always "listened good" to me. Here it is: "High water never washes away the mortgage. It may uproot trees and take the hen-coops sailing on down to the next state, but after the floods have subsided, the mortgage is still there as firmly as though it had been anchored to the foundations of the earth and then nailed down to the sills of the barn to make it doubly secure. Cyclones may blow away the woodshed, unroof the house, or take the haystack on an excursion over into another county, but when the blow is over it is always found that not even a corner of the mortgage has been jarred.

"Talk about sticking closer than a brother—there is a friend that hangs to the place like a porous plaster. Thieves do not come in and steal it; the sun does not warp it—neither does it wander off down the road every time the gate is left open. For a good, practical recipe for losing a mortgage, men would pay most any sum—but try their best, they simply can't."

Having read and endorsed this tribute to the mortgage and having talked the point over with some of our best bankers, it seemed to me as proper and wise to leave the matter in the hands of a bank's board subject to advice or suggestions from the department.

It is understood of course that the reference to the mortgage as made herein has in mind a conservatively placed, first mortgage on a good, improved farm, located where values are somewhat fixed and where no decline of consequence would follow a season of light crops or of crop failure. Even first mortgages when they cover property in the smaller towns or the newer sections of the country are not always found to be anchored to the foundations of the earth any more than second mortgages are.

These in brief are a few of the important points covered by our law which are suggested by experience and which every banker, wishing to build safely and permanently, must follow.

Many of our older bankers through their own experiences, good judgment, force of habit or inclination, adhere to these principles now almost naturally, and we have plenty of banks in South Dakota, both state and national, which under present management would be safe and sound without banking laws or bank examinations.

Our new law no doubt contains sections which will need to be amended—some of you may have found such already—but in any event experience will point them out and suggest the improvement, but I feel that we have in this

Farnsworth at the Tri-State Convention

The popular secretary, Col. Fred E. Farnsworth, of the American Bankers Association, made a hit with the Northwest bankers, at the tri-state meeting, and put in some good licks for the national body which he serves. He said in part:

Mr. Chairman, Guests, and Fellow Bankers of Three Great States:

I bring to you the greetings of the American Bankers Association—the largest and strongest organization on earth.

It was an excellent idea, successfully worked out, the bringing together of three great states—Washington, Oregon and Idaho—in a convention. If a state convention is a good thing, and a national convention of bankers a better thing, it follows that the bringing together of three states, whose interests are largely identical, where separate conventions can be held and joint sessions, with discussions, and perhaps what is best of all, social intercourse and an exchange of ideas and a comparison of methods, cannot but be of benefit to you all as bankers; and I predict that what you have done here will in the future be quite common throughout the United States.

The records prepared and furnished me by your state secretaries show that in this combination of states there is a large membership in your state associations as compared with the number of banks in the states eligible. In this respect, Washington is one of the banner states, almost every bank being a member of the state association.

The secretary of the American Bankers Association explains its aims and its work to the big Seattle meeting, in an able paper

In these three states you have in the American Bankers Association 397 members. You have most of the features in your work which are taken up by the various state associations; and what is most important, you have good, live, active secretaries, and to them much credit is due for your success. They are your executive officers; and with the loyalty of your membership, and the support of your officers, your associations are among the best.

This is an era of organization; the various units of which include combinations and trusts. During the past four or five years, a sentiment has been created in this country against combinations and trusts, and has even been so far-reaching as to create prejudice against organization.

There can be no great good achieved without some evil creeping into it, and while there may be occasion to criticize the combinations and the trusts, I am perhaps one of the minority in this extensive country, who believes great good comes from all of these aggregations. Legitimate organization for the advancement of business or social interests, when its activity is confined to specific lines, cannot but be of great advantage.

I do not believe it is necessary for me to dwell on the benefits of organization. With the progress of the times, in this resourceful country of ours, it became a necessity. We find it in religious denominations; in the arts and sciences; in business and commercial pursuits, the trades, and in the professions, not only for the protection of extensive interests, but for the social welfare of mankind. This banding together of men, and of women as well, and brought together as you are to-day, broadens vision from every viewpoint. It cements friendships which are everlasting; it gives an interchange of thought and experience which cannot but be of benefit to you in your chosen profession.

The organization of the American Bankers Association antedates all state organizations. The first convention was held in Saratoga, New York, in 1875, the object of which was to form an association of banks and bankers, to solve the problem of the resumption of specie payments by the United States. History records that the efforts in this direction were successful. A permanent organization was formed in 1876, which has in a broad and liberal-minded way, always endeavored to advance the welfare and prosperity of the country at large.

During the thirty-five years passed, no financial legislation of importance has been discussed or adopted by our government, without having been considered by our association, or its committees, and proper representation made, before the banking and finance committees of congress.

The first state association to organize was Il-

Illinois, in 1880. We now have throughout this incomparable union, forty-six state associations; most of them large and growing organizations. With the great increase in the membership of the American Bankers Association during the past few years, the scope and variety of its work has increased so that now we have a large number of effective departments and active working committees which are accomplishing much for the banking interests of the country.

Our membership now comprises 10,200 banks, embodying in its broad field, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, taking in Alaska, Mexico, Canada, Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico and the Isle of Pines. It is truly an American Bankers Association in every sense of the word. As an evidence of the loyalty of our membership, we have only about two hundred banks on our delinquent list, and our gross gain for the past year has been 1,400. The present income of the association is about $175,000 annually, and we have set aside a reserve fund, in round numbers, $120,000 in gilt-edge bonds.

In addition to the executive body of the association, there are 11 active standing committees, and much important work has been accomplished by them. In general work more especially, I might mention that of the bills-of-lading committee who have secured the adoption of a uniform bill-of-lading and are now endeavoring to have same passed by congress, which, without question, will be taken up at the next session.

The committee on express companies and money orders, of which Treasurer Kauffman is a member, has done splendid work in the introduction of the new travelers' check, which is being received by the bankers of the country generally with a great deal of enthusiasm, and within a short time will be as well and favorably known to the traveling public in Europe, as any check which is presented there.

The postal savings bank proposition, which was so prominent in the early session of the present congress, was taken up by the special committee of the savings bank section, and a large amount of educational work done. I do not believe we will hear much more about postal savings banks, or should the question come up again, it will probably be referred to the national monetary commission.

The guaranty of bank deposits is still with us. Such a measure can find no place in the present congress, but there are sections of this country that are thoroughly imbued with the fallacy, and in several of our western states, bills have been introduced into state legislatures proposing to put on the statute books a law guaranteeing bank deposits in state and savings banks. We already have had considerable evidence of this, and there is a determination on the part of business men and bankers to make a fight in opposition. Sooner or later, however, we must meet this problem. The demand for postal savings banks, or guaranty of bank deposits, will be so strong that it can only be overcome by the strengthening of our national banking system, and our state and savings banks, and by the establishment of savings and state banks under strong laws, in states which are now deficient in this direction. Without question, the masses have confidence in our national banks, and the suggestion has been made that our national banking act be so amended as to allow the national banks to do all kinds of legitimate business under federal supervision. There are now 2,011 national banks having a savings department, with aggregate deposits of $331,000,000.

It will be the important work of the American Bankers Association to watch and consider carefully its future banking and currency legislation. Its influence and its best efforts will be used to assist in every way possible, when required, through its federal legislative committee, the national monetary commission.

On May 1st, the savings bank section, having moved into the office fitted up for them by the American Bankers Association, it became necessary to secure additional space to take care of the legal department which had previously been occupying the office prepared for the savings bank section. A fine suite of offices have been secured contiguous to the main offices of the association, and General Counsel Paton is now comfortably located in his new quarters. The new suite of rooms acquired also provided additional space for other departments, which was greatly needed owing to increase in the work of the association.

Arrangements for the next convention of the American Bankers Association are being gradually evolved, and on June 4th the following local committee of bankers was appointed to formulate plans for entertainment, select speakers, and in a general way to supervise the entire program:

George M. Reynolds, president Continental National Bank, also president of the American Bankers Association, as general chairman.

Joseph T. Talbert, vice-president Commercial National Bank and president of the Chicago Clearing House.

David R. Forgan, president National City Bank.

Charles G. Dawes, president Central Trust Company; August Blum, vice-president First National Bank; W. T. Fenton, vice-president National Bank of the Republic; S. R. Flym, president of the Live Stock Exchange National Bank; John J. Abbott, vice-president American Trust & Savings Bank; B. C. Sammons, assistant cashier Corn Exchange National Bank.

SIXES SURPASS ALL OTHER TYPES

Tallow candles, coal oil lamps, gas, electricity — four stages of progress in the world's lighting problem.

One, two, four and six cylinders — relative stages of progress in the perfection of the automobile.

Tallow candles gave light. Coal oil lamps more light. Gas still more light. And electricity surpasses them all, giving most light and avoiding all the inconveniences and all the unsanitary conditions of candles, oil and gas.

One-cylinder cars were a success. Twos were better. Fours still better. But it remained for six-cylinder cars to surpass them all, overcoming all their faults and giving to the automobile a new and probably an ultimate perfection.

This perfection commands every phase of motoring — Quietness, Sweet running, Comfort to passengers, Slow work on high in congested quarters, Range of speed on high without gear-shifting, Ability to take hills on high where fours drop back to second and first, Economy of operation, and Longevity of car; and gives the Six owner the satisfaction of knowing that his car represents the utmost achievement in automobile designing and manufacturing.

These points of superiority should characterize every six-cylinder car on the market. They do characterize the

and we are prepared to show you in the car itself how surprisingly convincing Winton Six superiority really is.

The self-starter is a Winton Six feature, exclusively. Not to be found on any other car of any type. Motor starts from the seat without cranking. Winton Six owners declare this feature the most valuable improvement of recent years.

Every man who recognizes the superiority of electric lighting over candles, oil and gas, will quite as readily recognize the superiority of the Winton Six over other types when he rides in this car.

And the price, too, is right. The 48 horse-power Winton Six sells at $3000. That's at least $1000 less than the same horse-power will cost you in the best known fours—the gas light types of motor car progress.

Our Country from a Bankers Viewpoint

Americans from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Lakes to the Gulf, is the child of the South! We feel both grateful for, and proud of, its free institutions, its power for good at home and abroad, its protection to all classes of its citizens, and to all sections of its domain, its broad principles of free and equal manhood, and its democratic origin and maintenance. This is truly a government of the people, for the people and by the people, and the heritage from our forefathers is priceless.

Tennessee is my native state, but the greater part of my life has been spent in Georgia. While speaking of our country as a whole, I cannot refrain from telling you something of Georgia. I can best express my feeling for Georgia in one word—it is home—and we have and enjoy that hospitality in our homes, which fills the heart of the Southern gentleman to such an extent that utterance grows tame in expressing his feeling. In North Georgia we have some of the finest specimens of physical manhood to be found in the world. Hardy, sturdy mountaineers, and strong, able-bodied, industrious farmers comprise the yeomanry of our state. The purest Anglo-Saxon blood in the United States is to be found in Georgia. There is less contamination with alien immigrant blood there than anywhere else in this Union, and we have preserved in all of its pure proverbial sturdiness the Anglo-Saxon blood of the fathers of England. It is pleasing to me to state, however, that this Anglo-Saxon blood is thoroughly American in every respect, loyal to its flag and its brethren, and true to American ideals.

We are a law-abiding and hospitable people. We endeavor to practice what we preach in our coat-of-arms—"Wisdom, Justice and Moderation." We are a law-abiding, hospitable and justice-loving people, and we believe likewise in the exercise of wisdom and moderation in politics, religion, personal affairs, and public issues.

In climatic conditions in Georgia, and the southern section, we have everything we could wish. We have essentially a temperate climate; we live in a temperate zone, and with a people of temperate habits. Georgia is a pleasant place to live at any season of the year. There is no spring prettier than the southern spring, no summer more delightful, the mean temperature being in summer in North Georgia from 75 to 80 degrees; no autumn is more gorgeous with its lovely-tinted leaves, and invigorating Indian summer, no winter more bracing. We have no prostrating heat in the summer, and no playing with zero in the winter. We have no wet and dry seasons, and no direful epidemics, decimating the ranks of our population. The whole year round Georgians enjoy a most desirable climate, and there is hardly a day from the first of April to the first of December, that it is too cold to be in the open air.

The opportunities afforded by the state of Georgia for people with or without means are manifold. We have boundless resources yet untouched or insufficiently developed, affording a most inviting chance for the handling of immense capital profitably. We have work of some kind for everybody, and if people without means come to our state, and fail to find employment in the cities or towns, there is ample room on the farms for all industrious men to make their livelihood, if they desire. I would in all sincerity say, "Young man, go to Georgia." I love the people of my native state of Tennessee, but Georgia is the state of my adoption, and she extends a hearty welcome to everybody. She has such a diversity of resource and opportunity that there is ample room for all of us.

I have stated that I am not prone to moralize, or to censure, but there is in this great country of ours an agency, to which I am disposed to call attention, and which has concerned me in studying this country from a banker's viewpoint. The future of our country is in our own hands, and by our own conduct we may make or break ourselves. From the standpoint of conservative sagacity, and in the interest of our present and future prosperity, let us be reasonable, fair, tolerant and conservative in our criticisms and demands of corporate interests. There is a subtle current of popular criticism of corporations which can, if fostered, well nigh disintegrate our solid compact. A house divided against itself cannot stand, and we should not precipitate distrust and loss of confidence by assailing corporations. To-day popular displeasure may be directed against railroads, to-morrow it is popular displeasure against insurance companies, perhaps the day after it may be banks. Instead of being inimical to such interests, we should make our field inviting for the healthful immigration of capital for investment in the development of our immense natural resources. Our people need to be more patient and conservative, less restless, less nervous and irritable, and more optimistic and more encouraging. It matters not whether it is a public servant or a public corporation that merits our discussion, above all let us be just. Some may think that a fight upon corporate interests is for the country's good, but the future may demonstrate to the contrary, and in the meantime both the demagogue and his dupes may suffer.

Let us be patriots in the true sense of the word! I do not mean by the word "patriot" the man who is willing to bare his arm and shed his blood in the heat of battle. Our American people are not wanting in their readiness to rally round the Stars and Stripes when that gorgeous emblem is unfurled in the face of a foreign foe. We have nothing to fear from an outside foe. We have patriotism to spare, when war is on, and volunteers, when called for, are thicker than your waving fields of wheat. Our strength, as well as our martial patriotism is recognized all over the world, and our heroism as well as our magnanimity in war, makes the nations, which live and move in an atmosphere of police surveillance and militarism, stand aghast. I say we are not wanting in that kind of patriotism, but what we want is the patriot of peace, the man who will bare his arm against the inside foe, who, under the guise of zeal for his country, seeks to disintegrate it by insidiously striking at vital interests. We need patriots who will resent malicious and wanton attacks upon legitimate corporate interests, which have made our country what it is. We need safe and sane men to guide the ship of state forward, who will stand guard in the defense of constitutional and civic rights, which might be attacked by malice and jealousy; men who will not allow the constitution of these United States to be so gnarled by constructions born of favoritism as to amount to crucifixion. I feel that we have such men now at the head of our national government, and I feel that the country is to be congratulated upon its present administration. We need, however, in the private walks of life high-minded men who

ARTHUR REYNOLDS, President
J. H. BLAIR, Vice-President C. A. BARR, Cashier

Des Moines, June 24.—The Des Moines National Bank has moved into its new building located at Sixth and Walnut streets in the very heart of the business district of Des Moines. Saturday the doors were thrown open to the public and President Arthur Reynolds and his associate officials gave the glad hand to hundreds of friends of the institution who called to admire the handsome new building, perhaps the finest exclusive bank building in the state.

The new bank building was erected at cost of $90,000. The outer walls are of white terra cotta and the building is but one story in height though it is a tall story. Within, the bank is finished throughout in white marble and mahogany. The offices of the president and cashier are located on a balcony from which every portion of the building is visible. The cages are built of brass bars. There are five vaults, safety deposit, cash, storage and two book vaults. In anticipation of the removal the bank allowed its currency to decrease so that there was about a half million to be transferred. The transfer was made Sunday and the bank was firmly installed and ready for business when the doors opened Monday morning.

Arthur Reynolds is president of the Des Moines National, John H. Blair is vice-president, Cyrus A. Barr is cashier, and Joseph Zwart is assistant cashier.

Mysterious Woman Enters State Auditor's Office

Clerks in the office of State Auditor Bleakley are still talking about a mysterious woman who slipped quietly into the office one day last week, kissed each inmate on the back of the hand and made her escape. She kissed Auditor Bleakley's hand first and before that astonished official could remonstrate, she had imprinted a caress on the back of Frank Roberts' hand in the office of the state banking department. C. B. Ellis, chief banking clerk, sought to learn the woman's identity but had to be content with the statement that she was the United States of America.

Just Escape a Practical Joke

It has developed that the Des Moines bankers who attended the state convention at Waterloo in a private car narrowly escaped being victims of a rich practical joke. Arrangements had been completed to have the car uncoupled just outside of Waterloo and held up by a band of masked bandits. Then it occurred to the jokesters that in all probability none of the bankers would have any money but would depend upon check books to pull them through, so the scheme was abandoned.

Sold Bonds for New City Hall

The $350,000 bonds for the new city hall in Des Moines which was held up for months pending the enactment of a new law by the legislature permitting the city to increase her bonded indebtedness so as to permit the bond issue, have been sold to the George M. Bechtel Co., of Davenport. The bonds were sold at 4 per cent instead of 4½ per cent as had been expected. The money will be secured immediately and the new structure will be started this summer.

Directors Hold Last Meeting Under Old Name

The directors of the Marquardt Savings Bank held their last meeting under that name Monday. Then it was changed to Commercial Savings. This marks the passing of a name that has been known for fifty years in business and financial circles. G. W. Marquardt, the founder of the institution came to Des Moines from Iowa City thirty five years ago and has been prominently identified with Des Moines business circles ever since.

Writes Begging Pardon for Husband

Mrs. Aniel Walla of Lincoln, Neb., has written a touching letter to President E. A. Reid of the Imogene National asking that he use his influence in securing the pardon of her husband, convicted and sentenced to ten years as one of the robbers of the Imogene bank lately. The young wife writes to President Reid that Walla is a young man of 20, always a good husband and father of their little girl and says he was influenced to take part in the bank robbery by two others. She says that his conduct has broken the hearts of his wife and his mother.

Elected to Cashiership

Fred W. Kammann has been elected cashier and member of the board of directors of the First National Bank at Sioux City, succeeding Lawrence Critchell who has gone to Chicago. Mr. Kammann was formerly secretary of the Farmers Loan and Trust Company but for seven years was connected with the First National up to the retirement of James F. Toy, six months ago.

Lawrence Critchell, the former Sioux City banker, got into fast company when he reached Des Moines en route to Chicago and paid a fine in police court for fast auto driving. There were seven others leading Iowans arrested along with Critchell for the same offense and one of them was Charles H. Martin, president of the People's Savings of Des Moines. The police in Des Moines have a new automobile patrol wagon which they are using effectively in putting an end to automobile scorching on the city boulevards.

A Leading Banker Dies

A leading banker of the state died when S. W. Whites, president of the Urbana Savings Bank at Urbana expired at the home of his mother near Urbana. President Whites had never married though for eighteen years he had kept company with a popular young Urbana lady. He leaves a large acreage of Benton county land and was quite wealthy.

Arthur Reynolds to Address Wisconsin Bankers

President Arthur Reynolds of the Des Moines National has accepted an invitation to address the Wisconsin Bankers Association at their meeting June 28th and 29th. Secretary M. A. Graettinger told Mr. Reynolds to select his own subject. It is probable that Mr. Reynolds will give the same address that he gave before the Kansas Bankers Association a few weeks ago on the currency question.

Banking Notes

M. J. Cutler who has been president of the First National at Nora Springs has resigned after ten years. Henry C. Hamilton who has been connected with the bank for some time has been named to succeed him.

Announcement is made that a new bank and store building, to cost $7,000, will be constructed at Moorhead, work to start at once.

Our Country from a Banker's Viewpoint

feel the direct burden of the country's future upon their hearts, and who are conservative and considerate. We should not listen to the demagogue, and condemn without due consideration of both sides of such questions, public or personal, as daily arise for solution.

Acting upon impulse, often misguided, we have frequently and do frequently impose burdens upon heavily-weighted shoulders, and criticize worthy individuals and corporations for shortcomings, which often arise from conditions over which they have no control, and of the existence of which we have no notice. I plead for the exercise of that broader and more tolerant patriotism, which is truly the American spirit of fair play.

In view of this tendency, to which I have called attention, and which is more to be pitied than censured, and which is to a large extent born of ignorance, it has frequently occurred to me, and no doubt has likewise forced itself upon some of you, that the best interests of our country would be subserved if our legislative halls were filled with business men. If locally and nationally safe, substantial, progressive business men could be induced to take legislative burdens upon their shoulders—men who would represent their constituents with an eye single to their welfare, ideal legislation, I am sure, would result. To-day we have issues before us, which should be properly solved by thinking business men, who will be most affected by their settlement. In the solution of any complex public question it is to be indeed regretted that the demagogue can play his part, and to offset the effect of his influence it is our duty to help to educate the masses of our people to a true conception of their duty as American citizens.

As a rule bankers are not politicians, and many of us are disposed to ignore politics entirely, often much to our regret, but as we are deeply concerned in the perfection of our national service, and the strengthening of our commercial relations both among ourselves here at home and with foreign nations, it behooves the bankers of this great country to lend their aid, their influence, and their moral support to the betterment of conditions which affect the whole people and the whole nation. We should reach out beyond the narrow limits of the territory which our clientele may cover, and advocate measures and induce enactments which will benefit the whole people, and may mean millions of dollars to the commerce of our country at home and abroad.

It has occurred to me in this connection that we might help to arouse national pride to such an extent as that a liberal measure might be passed for the substantial upbuilding of a strong American merchant marine. It has been said of me that the betterment of the American merchant marine is my hobby. Whether it is my hobby or not, it seems to me that as a business proposition, if this nation would commit itself to a policy of liberal subsidy, it would be a master stroke toward our domination of Oriental trade, and the building up of foreign commerce in all parts of the world.

Some people in my section of the country object to the word "subsidy," but let us call it guaranty, or bounty, or premium, or anything else that is preferred, but let it be a substantial inducement to ship-building and ship-owning, in order that the American flag may not become extinct upon merchantmen upon the high seas. The South is becoming more and more interested in this great question of ship subsidy every day, because the digging of the Panama Canal means the outlet for our manufacturers to the Oriental market, and we want those goods hauled in American bottoms. It will also be an outlet for our goods to your market, and from your market to ours. National pride has much to do with this matter, but not all to do with it, for it is a great economic question from a money standpoint. It is a great drain upon the resources of our American people to pay foreigners to haul our exports. If a liberal subsidy measure was passed, this drain would cease; it would give investment to a billion dollars of American capital, and employment to half a million workmen. American labor would receive a million dollars a day that is now paid to foreigners; our markets would be widened, our freight reduced, our exports increased, our shipyards built up, and the American flag would soon have a prestige in international commerce second to none in the world. We should see for ourselves what other nations have gained by public bounties and profit by this object lesson.

Another necessary line of public policy in which we are deeply interested, in view of our increasing commerce, is the bettering of our consular service. As our business in foreign countries increases, it is imperative that we should select our consuls more with the view to capacity and capability, and not with the view to party or personal favoritism. The protection and regulation of our commerce abroad is a subject which vitally concerns this whole nation, and we should have men of capacity, ability, tact and skill to serve as consuls, for they will not only reflect great credit upon our country, but will protect and guard American interests, as well as throw life and activity into American commerce. Confidence in American-made goods can be rapidly established abroad by this agency, and in view of our greatly increasing export trade, we need men for consular assignments in the future who are something else besides figure-heads and political pets.

There are many other lines of public policy which I could cite you, but my time is limited and I do not feel disposed, even if it were not so, to further try the patience of this courteous and attentive audience. Just a few words in conclusion and will yield the floor to some one who will probably better entertain you. It certainly is an inspiration to us all, in the upbuilding of this great nation, to observe its rapid commercial strides in the past, and its wonderful possibilities in the future. I would seriously doubt the sincerity of the patriotism of any man who did not have a pardonable pride in the growth of his country, and feel encouraged to greater efforts in the future by the splendid achievements of the past.

We are in position to make even greater strides in the future towards an ideal state of commercial activity, for the country stands to-day upon a solid financial foundation, with as high a national credit as could be desired, and with a constantly increasing output annually of raw and manufactured material, and the balance of trade in our favor. We are raising to-day everything which man needs for his comfort and maintenance, and we are literally feeding the world. We are combining theoretical with practical training in such a way that our industrial and material growth in the future will not only be greater in volume, but in a greater state of perfection.

In all of our material progress we have never lost sight of the aesthetic side of our natures. We have grown in educational lines and with the higher state of our civilization, while wanting the material, we insist upon due regard for the beautiful and aesthetic, and, when the heart of the American citizen is exposed to view, you will find engraven there the images of fidelity, charity and loyalty, and not solely the image of commercialism.

As a sojourner among you from the South, let me say that, should you visit our section, you will find there gallant men, and noble and beautiful women; you will find hospitable homes and cheerful firesides; you will find the hearty hand-clasp and the royal welcome. The South to-day sends forth a warm greeting to all sections of this great country, and our people feel that, united as we are in effort and sentiment, our future history can not be less illustrious than our glorious past!

I close with a few lines from that sweet singer, George P. Morris, to whom we are indebted for many of our patriotic songs:

"A song for our banner? The watchword recall
Which gave the Republic her station:

'United we stand—divided we fall.'
It made and preserves us a Nation!

convention in its history, and Chicago is making arrangements to accommodate between four and five thousand people.

I can assure you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it gives me much pleasure to be with you at this tri-state convention, with so large a representation of the bankers of these states.

In conclusion, let me urge you to give your state associations and your secretaries your most hearty support. Attend your state conventions and the conventions of the American Bankers Association, and make an effort to go to Chicago the week of September 13th where you will see the largest and most successful convention in our history. It will not only benefit you, but the fraternity at large and affect your kindred interests—the great commercial pursuits of the nation. One cannot be divorced from the other. They go hand-in-hand, and success means prosperity.

the only sure way to obtain money was by nitroglycerine, dynamite, a crow-bar or a jimmy. The experience of surety companies during that trying period subsequently led to a more careful scrutiny of applications for bonds of this nature. Investigation developed that banks were asking the companies to guarantee deposits largely in excess of the bank's capital and surplus, so that in point of fact the surety companies were lending their capital to the banks, at a rate, then in effect, of approximately  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 1 per cent, and the bank paying 1 per cent or 2 per cent for the money experienced little difficulty in making a big profit by lending the money to others at anywhere from 5 to 10 per cent, with the bulk of the responsibility resting upon the surety company. Notwithstanding the recoveries made by the surety companies before and since that trying period, the losses in some large cases have been very heavy on this character of bonds, which caused an increase in the rate by many of the companies from  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 1 per cent to  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 1 per cent, and even 1 per cent, which has called forth a protest on the part of some banking institutions, but I believe many of my hearers will concede that such a rate is not inequitable, but rather, in some instances, the surety companies are entirely justified in asking that a rate of 1 per cent or, in extreme cases, 2 per cent be charged as a premium for such a guaranty.

The losses on depository bonds for small banks have not been relatively larger than the losses on the larger banks, but when a bank with a capital of $25,000 and with a surplus ranging anywhere from $2,000 to $25,000 asks a surety company to issue its bonds guaranteeing the county treasurer against loss covering a deposit of $100,000, I respectfully submit that the surety company contributes to the credit of that bank an element equal to its own invested funds, and therefore is entitled to a fair share of the profits of the money so secured, as its premium for the guaranty.

Since the Minnesota Bankers Association has entered into a contract with my company for the writing of bonds and for the insurance of burglary insurance policies, with the patience of my hearers I shall dwell slightly upon burglary insurance. This company has contracts with the bankers associations of Wisconsin on the East, Iowa on the South, and North and South Dakota on the West. We are members of the Interstate Protective Association, being one of the first to join that effective organization. We have more bank burglary business in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, than any other surety company in America. This is largely due to the fact that my company is well known for its prompt and liberal adjustments in the event of loss. Recently a loss occurred in one of the southern states where the cashier of the bank was forced by "yeggmen" to open the safe after ours. At that time the form of burglary policy in use by all of the companies covered no such loss, but my company, recognizing its duty to the bankers of this country, after consulting with the secretaries of the various state bankers associations, with whom our company is associated, forthwith attached to all of its policies then outstanding, a rider covering such loss, and issues what is now admittedly the most liberal burglary policy for banks issued by any company in the world. Bank burglary business is second only in importance to a surety bond on bank's employees. To the country banker who receives the deposits of his neighbors (and is bound to protect their property as well as the investment of his stockholders) it is more important than fire insurance to the merchant. When the knowledge of a bank burglary spreads in a small community, the information that burglary insurance was carried by the bank, insuring protection to the depositors, is certain in 90 per cent of the cases, at least, to avert what might otherwise prove a "run" on the bank, and our prompt action by the giving of telegraphic authority, to draw upon us for the amount of the loss, frequently involving thousands of dollars, has undoubtedly been the means of saving more than one banking institution from being required to close its doors and liquidate its affairs.

In this line of protection, as well as in suretyship, opportunity makes the burglar, therefore good safes, vaults and burglar alarms and night watchmen may lessen the opportunity to a very marked degree, but when a loss does occur, immediate indemnity is what saves the day. Although the National Surety Company has been in the business of burglary insurance for only a few years, it stands to-day at the head of the list for having apprehended and convicted within the last year more bank burglars than any other company engaged in this important line of business.

In conclusion, I wish to suggest to the bankers of this country that they co-operate with the surety companies in their endeavor to free themselves from the barnacles of pernicious competition that has so long been manifest. Bankers must have a fair rate of interest on funds loaned, to make a fair profit, and a surety or burglary insurance company must get a sufficient premium in order to pay its losses and make a profit, otherwise it must voluntarily, or involuntarily, retire from business; in either event, the policy-holder is quite likely to be the loser in one way or in another.

Banking Conditions in South Carolina

The burden of the work of the association naturally falls upon the various committees and the secretary, and their reports will inform you as to what has been done during the past year.

The secretary will report the splendid increase in membership since our last meeting, showing that there are now only eight banks in the state outside our association, which puts us about "the top" among the state associations for efficiency. This is very gratifying, and is due, in no small degree, to his faithful and persistent work, but it is a matter of considerable regret to me that we have not been able to enroll every bank in the state. This can be done by our next convention if the membership will actively aid the secretary. You will recall that at our last convention the legislative committee made certain recommendations as to "Warehouse Receipts and Bills of Lading" asking that this important matter be re-committed to the legislative committee, with instructions to secure, if possible, the necessary legislation to fix the legal status of the warehouse receipt and bill of lading. The report of the legislative committee will show that a bill was introduced at the last session of the legislature as to bills of lading, but nothing was done about the warehouse receipt, which, in my opinion, is more important to the banking interest.

The idea of our last legislative committee, as I have been informed by its chairman, was that an act should be passed by the legislature, requiring all public warehouses, in issuing receipts, to fully describe the property stored, so as to enable the pledgee of such receipts to identify the property; for example, the warehouse receipt for cotton should show the marks, weights and grades.

Our farmers are rapidly learning to see the folly of marketing the whole cotton crop in three or four months, thereby depressing the price; and are wisely taking steps to build warehouses so as to enable them to take care of their cotton, finance it, and distribute its sale over a much longer period of time. The banks of the state should co-operate with the farmers in this, as its successful solution means much to the future prosperity of the state. A loss of two cents per pound on cotton means a loss of from ten to thirteen millions of dollars annually to the producers of cotton in South Carolina; and every other interest necessarily shares in this loss.

President T. B. Stackhouse delivers the annual presidential address at the Wrightsville Beach convention — A very able paper

How important then is it that the warehouse receipt for cotton be made as strong as possible for collateral purposes. Many of you will remember the valuable address at our last convention of Mr. Paton, of New York, general counsel to the American Bankers Association in which he called attention to a case before our state supreme court in 1906, involving the negotiability of a note, when two of the judges held that the note was negotiable and two that it was not; and urged our association to use every effort to have a negotiable instrument law enacted, uniform with such law now in force in thirty-six other states.

Every banker present is no doubt frequently worried to know whether or not some paper offered him is negotiable, and yet this association has taken no action looking to legislation on this matter.

I understand that the bar association of the state is working to this end, and this association should co-operate with it. For several years, our legislative committee has been instructed to try to secure legislation abolishing days of grace. Our 1906 convention adopted a resolution looking to amending the burglary laws so as to apply to banks, and our last convention unanimously recommended legislation requiring state banks to carry a 15 per cent reserve against active deposits. None of these recommendations have been enacted into law.

Our inability to accomplish anything along legislative lines is due, in my opinion, to the practice of changing the personnel of the legislative committee every year. I would therefore recommend such change in our constitution as will give the committee charged with securing desired legislation longer time than one year to do so, and that this committee be requested to secure, if possible, legislation carrying out the recommendations heretofore made by this association.

Collections, except such as can be made only by suit, or threats of suit, are now sent to banks. This business should be a source of some profit, but my opinion is that an analysis of the collection account of nearly all our banks will show a loss, due to the expense of handling so many items which have to be returned. This condition should be remedied by the banks requiring the sender of the item, if not a bank, to send with each item not less than ten cents, this to be deducted from the collection charge, if the item is paid, and to be retained by the receiving bank if the item has to be returned.

Prior to 1860, bank capital in South Carolina was exempt from taxation by state or municipal authorities. Our banks are now paying for that exemption with the usual penalty. For the purpose of ascertaining the true situation, some months ago, I wrote to every bank in the state, asking for a statement, showing capital, surplus, undivided profits and taxes paid on January 1, 1908 and 1909, and received replies from only 111 banks.

Comptroller General Jones had kindly consented to assist me, as far as was possible from the records in his office, in ascertaining the taxes paid by other classes of property. Had I received from all of the banks complete replies to my inquiry, I feel confident that a showing could have been made that banks are assessed for taxation from ten to fifteen per cent higher than railroads, twenty to twenty-five per cent higher than cotton mills, forty to fifty per cent higher than other classes of personal property, and from fifty to one hundred per cent higher than real estate.

The total capital, surplus and undivided profits of the 111 banks that replied, was, on January 1st, 1908, $7,016,865.00 and the taxes paid by them that year amounted to $99,380 or 1.4 per cent, on the entire assets of the banks, including unearned interest. The statements for January 1, 1909, show about the same condition.

THE Canadian treasurer has stirred up the banking fraternity of our northern neighbor by advising that business men do not leave bank stocks in their estates, carrying as they do the double liability. He favors the holding of Dominion bonds, of course, but his bank stock views have done much harm and the banks are replying to stop the injury.

THE treasurer, Hon. Col. Matheson, has stated that a great many private investments are being made by gentlemen who sought to take care of their families in this way. "The double liability of bank stocks, now being exercised in the case of the Ontario Bank, had proven a hardship to many women. Business men could foresee a failure and liquidate their holdings, while women were often at a disadvantage."

THE house warming of the First National Bank, Joliet, last week was attended by the entire population of that city, and President George Woodruff may count up another marker on his success wire. The bank building is a beauty and will hold the lead for a while in cities of the size of Joliet.

AMONG those in attendance from Chicago were E. A. Potter, Oscar G. Foreman, Frank P. Judson, R. L. Rinaman, W. R. Dawes, Henry S. Henschen, Wilbur Hattery, George M. Benedict, John Fletcher, Wm. C. Cook, W. D. C. Street, F. C. Russell, O. J. Gondorf, Wm. A. Heath, Colin S. Campbell, Wm. G. Edens, Thomas C. King, W. T. Perkins, B. B. Castle, Henry S. Bowers.

FROM other parts of the state came numerous friends of Mr. Woodruff and the First National. Some of them were: T. D. Catlin, Ottawa; John Lambert, T. S. O. McDowell, Fairbury; Daniel Crabb, Delavan; J. O. Wilson, Bloomington; D. A. Henneberry, Minooka; H. H. Antrim, Freeport; P. Herdien, Galva; F. A. McCormick, Emden; J. J. Dougherty, Dwight; Wm. George, Aurora, and P. Saunders, Streator. Dinner was served at the Commercial Club.

THE inscription on a graven tablet in the new building was favorably commented upon by the guests. It reads:

TO THE MEMORY OF THE PAST GENERATIONS OF THE WOODRUFF FAMILY WHO FOUNDED AND BUILT UP THIS BANK, THIS BUILDING IS DEDICATED BY THE PRESENT GENERATION WITH THE HOPE THAT IT WILL NOT ONLY SERVE AS A MEMORIAL TO THOSE WHO HAVE PASSED, BUT THAT IT WILL LONG BE USED BY THE PEOPLE OF THE COMMUNITY WHICH CONTRIBUTED MOST TO THEIR SUCCESS.

THERE were nine bankers' conventions pulled off this week, five of them upon exactly the same dates. This is the pace that kills. The banking papers cannot cover them nor can the gentlemanly specialty men be at so many places at once. The secretaries' national association ought to get together on a plan which would relieve matters somewhat. It at present is a reflection upon their capacity. At the Chicago meeting something should be done.

NOTHING would place the stamp of genius upon the noble brow of Col. Farnsworth more indelibly than to evolve a plan for the states such as has been so effective among the groups of Missouri and Illinois. There isn't any sense in trying to hold any public attention when nine state conventions are pulled off in five days. It's worse than a three-ringed circus.

ANOTHER resolution bound to cause some excitement in the convention was one to limit the number of years which the secretary of the association may serve. Stacy B. Rankin, of South Charleston, has filled the position of secretary since the association was formed eighteen years ago. A banker from the eastern part of the state is said to be after the position.

AT the big Minnesota convention W. I. Prince, cashier of the City National of Duluth, was elected president of the association to succeed Joseph Chapman, Jr.; L. A. Huntoon, of Moorhead, was elected vice-president to succeed Mr. Prince; L. Whitmore, of Wabash, was re-elected treasurer, and C. R. Frost, of Minneapolis, was re-elected secretary.

THE association recommended O. H. Havill of St. Cloud for member of the executive council of the American Bankers Association, to succeed D. S. Culver of St. Paul, retiring by limitation; and J. S. Pomeroy, cashier of the Security National Bank, as vice-president for Minnesota.

SENATOR KNUTE NELSON'S bill permitting national banks to loan money on real estate, the travelers' checks of the American Bankers Association and the suggestion made by President Joseph Chapman, Jr., that the development of Minnesota be investigated by a committee of the Minnesota Bankers Association were indorsed in the resolution passed before the close of the session.

THE editor of the Financial Age, New York, has stated in his hot weather column that the editor of the Northwestern Banker, Des Moines, doesn't appear to know the difference between a skin disease and a swelled head, and from ripe experience, has proceeded to explain. Really, the matter in dispute should be settled by private correspondence.

BANKERS NATIONAL dividends continue at 8 per cent, with liberal additions to surplus, which make the stock better every year. Commercial National is up on "bids" to 320 but strangely enough no sales are recorded.

BROKERS in bank stocks in Chicago have been sending out postal card "bids" for the shares of several strong banks and when stock is offered are "sorry but the order has been filled. We, however, have another 'bid,' etc.," and always at a much lower price. Whether these are mere business pullers or legitimate orders, must remain a guess. If the transfer books show no transactions at the "bid" price, upon which the order was said to have been filled the conclusion must be against the broker.

BANK stocks in Chicago are on the upward trend and holders are loth to take profits in holdings which pay a fair return and grow more valuable year by year. Some stocks appear to be up forty points with no sales recorded. If such offers are bona fide it shows great affection for the shares if none comes out.

NOW Atchison is "piked" to go back to a 6 per cent basis on vastly improved earnings. Chicago investors always have gone in for Atchison and generally it has made money for them.

AMONG the valuable addresses crowded out of this issue, owing to there being so many state conventions going on at the same time are one by Samuel E. Knecht of the State Bank, Chicago; J. S. Royce, Owen N. Heaton, and R. S. Taylor, at the Indianapolis convention. Will try to present them next week.

THE BOND MAN.

Cut Out the Overtime on Pass Books

It isn't necessary any more to spend from one to three hours overtime because your customers were careless about bringing in their pass books.
Treat all your customers alike--send them a monthly statement of account. It will please them because it gives them a prompt, accurate means of verifying their figures, and you can make a statement on the Burroughs quicker than you can balance a pass-book, even though it has been kept carefully up-to-date.

Let us send you some sample bank statements, and explain in detail how the system will save dollars for your bank!
